Both the burghers and magiſtracy here profeſs Lutheraniſm, and in the town is a handſome pariſh church, and a grammar-ſchool. This town aſſerts that it is of greater antiquity than the imperial abby which ſtands near it; and the latter again maintains that the town owes its walls and its very appearance of a town to the abbots, and was for a long time ſubject to them, not the leaſt ſhadow of their independency appearing before the thirteenth century. In 1525, this town, for the ſum of 30,000 gold guilders, purchaſed to itſelf all rights, prerogatives, profits, and perquiſites, particularly all tolls and taxes, belonging to the abby, both within and without the town; which compact received the ſanction not only of the emperor, Charles V. but alſo of all his ſucceſſors, and likewiſe that of the ſee of Rome. By virtue thereof, the abby is to build on its ground no more than what is abſolutely neceſſary, and for its own ſervice; and not to fortify the abby, or raiſe any ſtructures conducive thereto; nor within a mile of the town of Kempten, to hold, or cauſe to be held, any market, either public or private. In the year 1633, the town was taken, ſword in hand, by the imperialiſts, with the ſlaughter of at leaſt two-thirds of the burghers. Its aſſeſſment in the matricula of the diet and circle was, in the year 1683, reduced from 156 florins to 52. To the imperial chamber at Wetzlar it pays 40 rixdollars, 54 kruitzers. It has no villages, but is poſſeſſed of lands, monies, tithes, and other incomes: 36 miles S. Augſburg, and 44 SE. Ulm. Long. 28. 2. E. Ferro. Lat. 48. 46. N.

KEMPTEN, a princely abby of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, founded, or repaired and enriched, by Hildegard, wife of Charlemagne, in the 8th century. The abbot ranked among the eccleſiaſtical princes, at leaſt as early as the year 1150. In the matricula of the empire he is aſſeſſed at ſix horſe and twenty foot, or 152 florins; and pays the chamber of Wetzlar 182 rixdollars, 56 kruitzers. To this abby belong ſome towns and villages.

KENOCK, or Knocque, or Quenocque, a fort of Flanders, built at the union of the rivers Iſere and Yperlee, in the village of Reuninghe; firſt built about the year 1662, by order of Philip IV. king of Spain, but was afterwards much enlarged by the famous Vauban, who made it a regular fortreſs, flanked with four baſtions, built of freeſtone, and two half-moons, by order of Louis XIV. when he made himſelf maſter of Ypres, in 1678. It is very ſmall, not above 750 feet in length, and 500 in breadth. In the year 1692, ſome French engineers marked out a plan for additional works, but the project came to nothing. William III. king of England, ſent ſome troops, under the duke of Wittemburg, to attack this fort, on the 19th of June, 1695, but only a deception to cover his deſign of attacking Namur. The 6th of October, 1712, a detachment from the garriſon of Oſtend, which was then in the hands of the Dutch, made themſelves maſters of this fort by ſurprize, through the treachery of the gardener; the French commander and the garriſon being made priſoners of war. It was ceded to the States by the peace of Aix-la Chapelle, concluded in 1713, and taken by the French in 1744: 10 miles NW. Ypres, and 10 SE. Nieuport.

Genteel families reſide there by permiſſion of the king. The gardens are upwards of three miles in circumference: 2 miles W. London.

KENSINGTON, a town of United America, in the ſtate of New Hampſhire: 13 miles SW. Portſmouth.

KENT, a county of England, bounded on the north by the river Thames, which ſeparates it from Eſſex, on the eaſt and ſouth-eaſt by the Engliſh Channel, on the ſouth by Suſſex, and on the weſt by Surry. About ſixty miles in length from eaſt to weſt, and from thirty to thirty-eight from north to ſouth. It is divided into ſixty-three hundreds, which contain two cities, thirty-nine market towns, and about 200,000 inhabitants. Two chains of hills run through the middle of Kent, called the upper and lower hills; the northern range, and whole north ſide of the county, are compoſed principally of chalk and flints; the ſouthern, iron and ragſtone: more weſterly, towards Surry, clay and gravel prevail upon the eminences. Below this laſt range lies the Weald, an extenſive level tract of land, rich and fertile at ſome places, where fine paſturage and timber are produced. The ſoil a deep clay and marl, and ſo ſoft, that the carriage and ploughing work is moſtly done by unſhod oxen. The principal rivers of Kent are the Thames, the Medway, the Stour, and the Rother; the two former are navigable for the largeſt ſhips to Woolwich and Chatham, and for ſmall craft to a very great diſtance. The Stour and the Rother admit coaſting veſſels to Sandwich and Rye. The Ravenſborn, the Cray, and the Darent, are ſmall creeks, or ſtreams, that fall into the Thames: the firſt at Deptford, the others in one channel at Longreach, Moſt of the marſh land of this county lies along the margin, or at the mouths of theſe rivers, or has been formerly covered with the waters of ancient havens and ports, now in a great meaſure obliterated. Theſe rivers have formed iſlands towards their mouths. Thus the Thames and the Medway, at their extremities, contributed their waters jointly to the ſeparation of the Iſle of Graine from the main land, but the channel is now filled up. The Swale, one of the mouths of the Medway, in like manner cuts off Shepey from the continent of Eaſt Kent. Graine is throughout low and marſhy, and is about three miles and a half long, and two and a half wide. Thanet had a full claim to the title of an Iſland when the Reculver was in its proſperity; but its pretenſion to the appellation is now barely kept up by a ſmall ſewer communicating with the Stour and the ſea. The bed of that once famous harbour now forms valuable tracts of marſhes, comprehending above twenty-five thouſand acres. Thanet including Stonar, nearly forty-one ſquare miles, or about twenty-ſeven thouſand acres. The Weald of Kent, before mentioned, was formerly entirely covered with woods. It has now many ſmall towns and villages, but is more thinly inhabited than the other parts of the county, and, of courſe much leſs cultivated. Its principal productions are large fat oxen, hops, fruit, and oak timber. Romney-marſh is an extenſive tract of rich marſh land, at the ſouth corner of the county, originally encloſed from the ſea by a ſtrong wall thrown up between the towns of Romney and Hythe. Its chief productions are mutton and wool. Thoſe of the county at large are horſes, cattle, ſheep, hogs, veniſon, poultry, game, rabbits, and fiſh; wheat, barley, oats, beans, peas, and tares; canary, clover, trefoil, cinquefoil, and moſt other garden ſeeds; aſparagus, potatoes, turnips, and all kinds of culinary plants; hops, timber, underwood, iron, ſtone, chalk, copperas, ſalt, &c. &c. &c. Its manufactures are but trifling. The iſle of Thanet is a dry, hard, rock chalk. The tops of the ridges are about ſixty feet above the level of the ſea, and are covered with a dry, looſe, chalky mould, from four to ſix inches deep; it has a mixture of ſmall flints, and is, without manure, a very poor ſoil. The vales, between the ridges and the flat lands on the hills, have a depth of dry loamy ſoil, from one to three feet, leſs mixed with chalk, and of much better quality. The open parts between Canterbury, Dover, and Deal, is of various ſoils. The principal are chalk, loam, ſtrong cledge, hazel mould, and ſtiff clay. Beſides theſe, there are ſome ſmall tracts of flints, gravel and ſand. The woodlands of the eaſtern part of Kent furniſh the country with wood for firing, and for huſbandry uſes, and the dock-yards with timber for ſhip-building; but the moſt material part of their produce is the immenſe quantity of hop-poles cut out for the neighbouring plantations. The lands in the vicinity of Feverſham, Sandwich, and Deal, are extremely fertile, and under the moſt excellent ſyſtem of management; producing great crops of wheat, beans, barley, oats, peas, and ſometimes canary and radiſh ſeeds. In the vicinity of Sandwich there are many orchards, which ſome years produce large quantities of excellent apples; ſome of which go to the London market, but the principal part is ſent by the coal veſſels to Sunderland and Newcaſtle. The hop-grounds of the pariſhes between Sandwich and Canterbury are thoſe which produce the fine Eaſt Kent hops, ſo much ſought after by the London brewers. But the principal hop plantations are about Canterbury and Maidſtone. In the neighbourhood of Maidſtone, are a great number of ſmall fields, of from one to ten acres, and ſomewhat more, planted with fruit of different kinds, cherries, apples, and filberds, for which the rocky ſoil of the neighbourhood ſeems particularly adapted. The weſtern part of this county conſiſts of a great variety of ſoils and ſyſtems of management. It is much more encloſed than the eaſtern part, and produces more timber and underwood. The cities of Kent are Canterbury and Rocheſter. The towns are Maidſtone, Dover, Romney, Sandwich, Hithe, Queenborough, Chatham, Woolwich, Greenwich, Deal, Tunbridge, Folkſtone, Graveſend, Aſhford, Dartford, Appledore, Cranbrook, Eltham, Bromley, Sevenoaks, Wye, Tenterden, Smarden, Goudhurſt, Lenham, Malling, Lydd, Margate, Wrotham, Ramſgate, Elham, Milton, Feverſham, Weſterham, Deptford, Sittingburn, Northfleet, Crayſord, and Folkingham. Two members are returned for each of the firſt eight, and for the county.

Another Branch, called the South Fork, riſes about forty-five miles to the weſt of the North Fork; and a third branch, called the Middle Fork, riſes between the other two: all unite together near Franklinville, and the united ſtream taking a north-weſt courſe, empties itſelf into the Ohio. Long. 85. 30. W. Greenwich. Lat. 38. 35. N.

KENTUCKY, one of the United States of America, bounded on the north and north-weſt by the Ohio, on the eaſt by Verginia, on the ſouth by the Tenaſee ſtate, and on the weſt by the Miſſiſippi; about 390 miles long from eaſt to weſt; the northern boundaries are very irregular, varying according to the windings of the Ohio, in ſome places it is 150 miles wide from north to ſouth, in others about 70; and towards the weſtern extremity, before the Ohio joins the Miſſiſippi, for about 40 miles, it is ſcarcely 20 miles wide. This country was formerly part of Virginia, but formed into an independent ſtate in the year 1792. It is divided into nine counties, of conſiderable extent. The ſoil is repreſented as exceedingly fertile, and the climate temperate and healthy; ſnow ſeldom falls, and the winter never continues above three months, ſeldom above two. The country abounds in rivers, and is, in general, well furniſhed with timber. Among the trees are found the oak, locuſt, poplar, beech, ſugar-maple, coffee-tree, papwa, or cucumber-tree, ſo called from its fruit, which reſembles the cucumber in ſize and ſhape, black mulberry, wild cherry, magnola, and a great variety of others. Iron, lead, ſulphur, alum, ſalt, and copperas are found in different places, and ſeveral medicinal ſprings. Among the native animals, the principal is the biſon, with ſome deer, panthers, wolves, elks, bears, foxes, beavers, ſquirrels, racoons, &c.; other quadrupeds have been introduced by the ſettlers, ſuch as horſes, cows, hogs, and ſheep, This country was purchaſed by the ſtates of Virginia of the Indians, in the year 1775, ſince which it has been improved and cultivated almoſt beyond example, and contains many conſiderable towns, the principal of which are Lexington, and Waſhington. In the year 1790, the number of inhabitants was 73,677, ſince which time, perhaps, it would not be too high rated to compute them at 200,000. The principal rivers are the Ohio, Licking, Red River, Kentucky, Elkhorn, Dick's River, Salt River, Green River, Cumberland, and Kanhawa, all which abound in fiſh, and are navigable for boats almoſt to their ſources. By the conſtitution of this ſtate, the government is veſted in a governor, ſenate, and houſe of repreſentatives. The declaration of rights aſſerts the civil equality of all; their rights to alter the government at any time; liberty of conſcience; freedom of elections, and of the preſs; trial by jury; the ſubordination of the military to the civil power; the rights of criminals to be heard in their own defence; the right of the people to petition for the redreſs of grievances, to bear arms, and to emigrate from the ſtate. It prohibits unreaſonable ſearches and ſeizures; exceſſive bail; confinement of debtors, unleſs there be preſumption of fraud; ſuſpenſion of habeas corpus writ, unleſs in rebellion or invaſion; ex poſt facto laws; attainder by the legiſlature; ſtanding armies; titles of nobility, and hereditary diſtinction.

KIANG-NAN, a province of China, bounded on the north by Chan-tong, on the eaſt by the ſea, on the ſouth by Tche-kiang and Kiang-ſi, and on the weſt by Honan, and Hou-quang. Here the ancient emperors always kept their court, till they were obliged for reaſons of ſtate to remove nearer Tartary, and chooſe Peking for the place of their reſidence. It is of vaſt extent, and contains fourteen cities of the firſt order, and ninety-three of the ſecond and third order. Theſe cities are very populous, and of the greateſt note in the empire, eſpecially for commerce ; it is the rendezvous of all the great barks, for the country is full of lakes, rivers, and canals, either natural or the effect of labour, which communicate with the great river Yang-tſe-kiang, that croſſes the province ; here are few mountains, but towards the ſouth. The ſilks, the japaned goods, the ink, the paper, and in general every thing that comes, as well from Nan-king, as from the other cities of the province, which carry on a ſurpriſing commerce, is much more eſteemed, and bears a greater price, than what is brought from the other provinces : there are many ſalt-works along the ſea coaſt, and the ſalt they produce is diſtributed almoſt through the empire : here is alſo found a great quantity of marble. In ſhort, this province is ſo plentiful and rich, that it pays the emperor, annually, about 32,000,000

32,000,000 crowns, without reckoning the dues of imports and exports, for the receipt whereof ſeveral officers are eſtabliſhed. Nan-king is the capital.

KIANG-SI, a province of China, bounded on the north by Kiang-nan, on the eaſt by Fo-kien and Tche-kiang, on the ſouth by Quang-tong, and on the weſt by Hou-quang. Towards the provinces of Quang-tong and Fo-kien, the country is mountainous; but intermixed with fertile vallies and well cultivated. Kiang-ſi is watered with brooks, lakes, and rivers, which abound with great variety of fiſh, eſpecially with ſalmon, trout, and ſturgeon. The mountains with which the province is ſurrounded, are either covered with wood, or famous for their minerals, ſimples, and medicinal plants. The ſoil produces all the neceſſaries of life in great plenty, and is very rich in mines of gold, ſilver, lead, iron, and tin. They make here very fine ſtuffs: and their wine, which is made of rice, is reckoned delicious by the Chineſe. It is, above all, famous for the fine China ware, which is made at Kiang-te-tching, and for the rice it produces, which is much eſteemed in the empire; at Kiang-ſi, they load many of the imperial barks with it. The river Kan-kiang divides the whole province into two parts, which contains thirteen cities of the firſt order, and ſeventy-eight of the ſecond and third orders. Nan-tchang is the capital.

KIEL, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Holſtein, ſituated at the bottom of a bay or gulf in the Baltic, which forms a convenient harbour; it belongs with the territory to the empire of Ruſſia. Here are 800 houſes, three churches and an univerſity, founded in the year 1665, and a college eſtabliſhed in 1768. The proſperity of this place is not a little promoted by the annual reſort to it, which conſiſts of the meetings of the nobility, and perſons of wealth in Holſtein and Sleſwick, for the transferring, placing out, and redemanding of their monies. This pecuniary intercourſe laſts eight days, and at the ſame time alſo is held a conſiderable fair, which is rung in on twelfth day, and on the eve of the purification terminated, by a ſecond ringing of the ſame bell. It was anciently one of the hanſe-towns, and the ſtaple likewiſe for all goods exported or imported from Denmark, an advantage which count John III. procured in 1321, from Chriſtopher II. king of Denmark: 47 miles N. KIEV, or Kiov, or Kiow, a town of Ruſſia, and capital of a government to which it gives name, on the Dnieper. In the year 1037, the great duke Jaroſlow declared it the capital of Ruſſia, and it continued to be the reſidence of the great dukes till the twelfth century. Afterwards it fell into the hands of the Poles, but at the treaty of Andruſſow, they gave it up, in 1667, to the Ruſſians, for a certain term of years, and in 1686, ceded it to Ruſſia for ever. It conſiſts properly of three ſmall towns, namely, the caſtle of Petſherſky, with its ſuburbs, the old city of Kiev, and the town of Podol, that lies below the latter; which are partly incloſed with a common fortification, and in other parts have a communication by a large entrenchment, carried on as the inequality of the mountains would permit. The caſtle of Petſherſky ſtands on an eminence facing the ſouth; and beſides barracks for the garriſon, magazines, officers' houſes, and ſome churches, includes that rich and ſtately monaſtery, which was founded in the eleventh century, and called Petſherſky, becauſe the monks formerly lived in a Petſhera, i. e. a cavern, on the mountain where the convent now ſtands. In its ſubterraneous vaults, which reſemble a labyrinth, and conſiſt of cells, chapels, &c. are found great numbers of undecayed bodies, ſuppoſed to be the remains of ſaints and martyrs. The old city of Kiew ſtands on an eminence facing the north, and is fortified according to the mountainous nature of the country, with horn-works, &c. Here ſtands the cathedral. Podol lies below Old Kiev in the plain, on the banks of the Dnieper, and, excepting the univerſity, churches, and convents, entirely ſhops and tradeſmen's houſes. It is the ſee of a Greek archbiſhop: 420 miles E. Cracow, and 565 S. Peterſburg. Long. 48. 40. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 32. N.

KILDARE, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinſter, bounded on the north by Meath, on the eaſt by Dublin and Wicklow, on the ſouth by Carlow, and on the weſt by King's County and Queen's County; about 32 miles in length from north to ſouth, and from 12 to 21 from eaſt to weſt. The number of houſes in this county is about 11,200, and inhabitants 56,000, the ſoil is generally fertile, and the air temperate. It is well watered: the principal rivers are the Liffy, the Barrow, and the Boyne. The principal towns are Kildare, Athy, Naas, and Monaſtereven: the three firſt and the borough of Harriſtown, which only conſiſts of a ſingle houſe, and the county, return each two members to the Iriſh parliament. The aſſizes for the county are held alternately at Athy, and Naas.

KILDARE, a town of Ireland, in a county of the ſame name, the ſee of a biſhop, founded at the end of the fifth century; the cathedral church is ſmall, beſides which there is a pariſh church, but no epiſcopal palace. Kildare is chiefly ſupported by frequent horſe races on what is called the Curragh, a fine plain, containing upwards of 3000 acres. It is a borough town, and ſends two members to the Iriſh parliament: 33 miles WNW. Wicklow, and 28 SW. Dublin. Long. 6. 57. W. Greenwich. Lat. 53. 9. N.

KILLALLA, a town of Ireland, in the county of Mayo, the ſee of a biſhop, founded about the middle of the fifth century, and united with Achonry, ſituated on a fine bay of the Atlantic to which it gives name. This bay is near ſix miles from eaſt to weſt, and five from north to ſouth. Killala is not a town of conſequence: 23 miles N. Caſtlebar, and 26 W. Sligo. Long. 9. 3. W. Greenwich. Lat. 54. 12. N.—This place has been rendered remarkable by the landing of a body of French troops, commanded by general Humbert, in its vicinity, on the 22d of Auguſt, 1798. This force, conſiſting of little more than 1000 men, with three pieces of cannon, after routing the few troops which could be immediately aſſembled to oppoſe its progreſs, advanced to Caſtlebar, the principal town of the county of Mayo, and on the morning of the 27th attacked, and completely defeated, a conſiderable force commanded by Lieutenant-General Lake, which had by this time been collected from different parts of the country, and had taken an advantageous poſition in front of the town. Our loſs on this occaſion amounted to between 300 and 400 men, and 9 pieces of artillery, as ſtated in our official returns; while, according to the accounts of the enemy, it amounted to 1800, of which 600 were killed or wounded, and 1200 taken priſoners, with 10 pieces of cannon, 5 ſtand of colours, 1200 firelocks, and almoſt all the baggage. In the ſame accounts it is alſo ſaid, that, the force under general Lake amounted to between 5000 and 6000, of which 600 were cavalry. Certain it is, that our army was very ſuperior in numbers to that of the enemy, and its defeat very diſaſtrous, owing, it is ſuppoſed, to a panic having ſeized ſome regiments early in the action. After this extraordinary and unexpected ſucceſs, the French remained inactive at Caſtlebar for ſeveral days, either, it is thought, in expectation of freſh forces landing from France, or of being joined by ſome Iriſh rebels of note and influence in the country. Had the enemy advanced immediately after the battle of Caſtlebar, the whole province of Connaught would probably have been in arms to join them; and, though ſuch a contemptible foreign force even in that caſe could not have finally ſucceeded, it might have done incalculable miſchief. But, during this ill judged, though for us fortunate, delay, the marquis of Cornwallis, lord lieutenant of Ireland, and commander in chief, had drawn together a very great force to the province of Connaught, and had made ſuch diſpoſitions as awed the diſaffected, and rendered the deſtruction of the enemy inevitable. Upon his approach at the head of about 8000 men, the French early on the morning of the 4th of September, ſuddenly left Caſtlebar, and marched rapidly acroſs the country towards Sligo, and being attacked not far from that place by part of the garriſon under the command of colonel Vereker, near the village of Coloony, they defeated him with conſiderable loſs, paſſed the Shannon at Ballintra, and directed their march ſoutherly, apparently with the hope of being able to reach the capital. But on the 8th September, general Lake, who commanded a column of lord Cornwallis's army, came up with them near Ballinamuck, in the county of Longford, and after a ſhort action, the whole ſurrendered at diſcretion. The enemy had been joined at one time by about 8000 rebels, chiefly armed with pikes, but at the battle of Ballinamuck this number had been greatly reduced by deſertion, and not more than 1500 were engaged there. Theſe unfortunate men fought a conſiderable time after the French had laid down their arms—many of them were killed, and the reſt diſperſed.

KILLALOE, a town of Ireland, in the county of Clare, the ſee of a biſhop, founded in the 5th century. In the 12th century, it was united with the biſhopric of Roſcrean, and in the year 1752, the biſhopric of Kilfenora was annexed to it. It is ſituated on the Shannon, by which it is ſeparated from the county of Tipperary, with a bridge of communication: 20 miles E. Ennis, and 11 NNE. Limerick.

KILLARNEY, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kerry: 36 miles W. Cork, and 50 SW. Limerick. Long. 9. 27. W. Greenwich. Lat. 52. 2. N.

KILLARNEY, a beautiful lake of Ireland, in the county of Kerry, and province of Munſter, otherwiſe called Lough Lean, from its being ſurrounded by high mountains. It is properly divided into three parts, called the Lower, Middle, and Upper Lake. The northern, or lower lake, is 6 miles in length, and from 3 to 4 in breadth. The country on this and the eaſtern boundary, is here and there diverſified with gentle ſwells, many of which afford beautiful proſpects of the lake, the iſlands, and ſurrounding ſcenery. The S. ſhore is compoſed of immenſe mountains, riſing abruptly from the water, and covered with woods of the fineſt timber. From the centre of the lake, the view of this range is aſtoniſhingly fine, preſenting to the eye an extent of foreſt 6 miles in length, and from half a mile to a mile in breadth; hanging as a robe of rich luxuriance on the ſides of two mountains, whoſe bare tops, riſing above the whole, form a perfect contraſt to the verdure of the lower region. On the ſide of one of theſe mountains is O'Sullivan's caſcade, which falls into the lake with a roar that ſtrikes the timid with awe. The view of this ſheet of water is uncommonly fine, appearing as if it were deſcending from an arch of wood, which overhangs it above 70 feet in height, from the point of view. Coaſting along this ſhore affords an almoſt endleſs entertainment, every change of poſition preſenting a new ſcene; the rocks hollowed and worn into a variety of forms by the waves, and the trees and ſhrubs burſting from the pores of the sapleſs ſtone, forced to aſſume the moſt uncouth ſhapes, to adapt themſelves to their fantaſtic ſituations. The iſlands are not ſo numerous in this as in the upper lake; but there is one of uncommon beauty; namely, Inniſfallen, nearly oppoſite O'Sullivan's caſcade. It contains 18 Iriſh acres. The coaſt is formed into a variety of bays and promontories, ſkirted and crowned with arbutus, holly, and other ſhrubs and trees. The interior parts are diverſified with hills and dales, and gentle declivities, on which every tree and ſhrub appears to advantage: the ſoil is rich even to exuberance; and trees of the largeſt ſize incline acroſs the vales, forming natural arches, with ivy intwining in the branches, and hanging in feſtoons of foliage. The promontory of Mucruſs, which divides the upper from the lower lake, is extremely romantic; and a road is carried through the centre of it, which unfolds all the interior beauties of the place. Among the diſtant mountains, Turk appears an object of magnificence; and Mangerton's more lofty, though leſs intereſting ſummit, ſoars above the whole. The paſſage to the upper lake is round the extremity of Mucruſs, which confines it on one ſide, and the approaching mountains on the other. Here is that celebrated rock, called The Eagle's Neſt, which produces wonderful echoes, A French horn ſounded here, raiſes a concert ſuperior to 100 inſtruments, in ſome ſituations: and the report of a ſingle cannon is anſwered by a ſucceſſion of peals reſembling the loudeſt thunder, which ſeems to travel the ſurrounding ſcenery, and die away among the diſtant mountains. The upper lake is 4 miles in length, and from 2 to 3 in breadth; it is almoſt ſurrounded by mountains, from which deſcends a number of beautiful caſcades. The iſlands in this lake are numerous, and afford an amazing variety of pictureſque views. The centre lake, which communicates with the upper, is ſmall in compariſon with the other two, and does not ſhew an equal variety. The ſhores, however, are, in many places, indented with beautiful bays, ſurrounded with dark groves of trees, ſome of which have a very pictureſque appearance, when viewed from the water. The eaſtern boundary is formed by the baſe of Mangerton, down the ſteep ſide of which deſcends a caſcade, viſible for 150 yards. This fall of water is ſupplied by a circular lake near the ſummit of the mountain; which, on account of its immenſe depth, and continual overflow of water, is conſidered as one of the greateſt curioſities in Killarney. One of the beſt proſpects which this admired lake affords, is from a riſing ground near the ruined cathedral of Aghadoe. In the ſeveral mountains adjacent to the lakes, veſtiges of ancient mines of iron, lead, and copper are ſtill to be ſeen.

KILLERIE'S HARBOUR, a bay of the Atlantic, on the weſt coaſt of Ireland, between the counties of Mayo and Galway. Long. 9. 46. W. Greenwich. Lat. 53. 38. N.

KILLMACDUAGH, a village of Ireland, in the county of Galway, and ſee of a biſhop, united with Clonfert. Nothing but the walls of the cathedral remain: near it are the ruins of a monaſtery and of ſeveral chapels. Theſe, with a large round tower, of very ancient and rude maſonry, denote the once conſequence of this now wretched village: 12 miles N. Ennis, and 2½ SW. Gort.

KILLMAINHAM, a decayed ſort of town, ſituated on the W. extremity of the city of Dublin, in a pretty little valley, on the great weſtern road. It was ſometimes the ſeat of government, before the caſtle at Dublin was appropriated to that purpoſe. Without any apparent cauſe for ſuch a choice, except perhaps the cheapneſs of rents, the manufactures of iron goods, eſpecially of the heavy kind, have been eſtabliſhed here; and whether from the riotous conduct of the workmen, or from ſome other cauſe, the place has dwindled away, and the ſtreet or road, from its low ſituation, is often almoſt choaked up with dirt. At preſent, the workmen are pretty much diſperſed in and about the city, the people of induſtrious habits have returned, and it ſeems to be improving. A ſtream of water runs in the bottom, which carries ſome mills, and on which there are ſeveral tan-yards. On the hill on one ſide, ſtands the royal hoſpital of invalids, an elegant building; and on the oppoſite hill, the foundling hoſpital. The quarter ſeſſions for the county of Dublin, and the election for the knights of the ſhire, are held here.

KILLMALLOCK, a town of Ireland, in the county of Limerick, about two centuries ago, one of the beſt built inland towns in the kingdom; the walls of many large houſes, of ſtone, and excellent workmanſhip, remain to this day, while the ruins of the churches and monaſteries, walls and gates, denote its former ſplendour. Though now reduced to the ſituation of a miſerable village, it is yet a borough, and ſends two members to the Iriſh parliament : 4 miles NE. Charleville, and 16 S. Limerick.

KILLMAURS, a town of Scotland, in the county of Ayr : 4 miles ENE. Irvine.

KING-TE-TCHING, a town of China, in the province of Kiang-ſi. This town, where the beſt makers of china-ware live, is as populous as the greateſt cities of China, and wants nothing but walls to make it a city. Theſe places are called tching, that are of great reſort and commerce, but not walled. They compute in this town more than 1,000,000 of ſouls. They conſume here every day more than 10,000 loads of rice, and above 1000 hogs, without mentioning other animals which they feed upon. The lodgings of the great merchants take up a vaſt ſpace, and contain a prodigious number of workmen. King-te-tching is a league and a half long, ſtanding on the ſide of a fine river, the ſtreets are very long, and cut and croſs one another at certain diſtances; all the ground is made uſe of, ſo that the houſes are too much confined, and the ſtreets too narrow; in going through them, one ſeems to be in the middle of a fair, and hears on all ſides the noiſe the porters make to clear the way. Strangers are not permitted to lie at King-te-tching, they muſt either paſs the night in their barks, or lodge with their acquaintance, who paſs their word for their conduct: 655 miles S. Peking. Long. 134. 40. E. Ferro. Lat. 29. 25. N.

KINGTON, ſee Kyneton.

KING-TONG, a city of China, of the firſt rank, in the province of Yun-nan, on the Pa-pien river. This city is ſurrounded with very high mountains, in which they ſay there are ſilver mines; the country abounds with rice, and the vallies are well watered with rivers and brooks. Although it is placed in the firſt rank, there is no other city in the diſtrict: 1240 miles SW. Peking. Long. 118. 25. E. Ferro. Lat. 24. 30. N.

KIN-HOA, a city of China, of the firſt rank, in the province of Tche-kiang. This city is placed in the heart of a province, and on the banks of a fine river, into which ſeveral little ones diſcharge themſelves. It was formerly of great extent, and famous for the beauty of its buildings, but the people, who are of a warlike diſpoſition, having long reſiſted all the power of the Tartars who invaded China, were at length ſubdued, and one part of the city burnt. It is now rebuilt, as well as a large bridge, which is on the weſt ſide. Kin-hoa hath eight towns of the third order in its diſtrict; they are partly ſituated in a level country, and partly among mountains. Rice grows here in great plenty, and the wine made of it is much eſteemed. The inhabitants carry on a great trade in large dried plumbs and hams, which are much eſteemed, and ſent into all the provinces of the empire. There are almoſt every where ſeen little ſhrubs, with a white flower, not unlike jeſſamin, which produce tallow, that makes very white candles, which will not ſtick to the hands, nor yield any bad ſmell when extinguiſhed : 682 miles SSE. Peking. Long. 137. 2. E. Ferro. Lat. 29. 16. N.

It is near an Engliſh mile in length; its breadth is very inconſiderable, and it has only one ſtreet, which is narrow and ill paved. The number of houſes amounts to about 300. It was formerly the reſidence of the biſhop of Orkney. The cathedral of St. Magnus, the king's caſtle, and the biſhop's and earl's palaces, are the only buildings here that are any way remarkable. The principal articles of exportation are beef, pork, butter, tallow, hides, calf-ſkins, rabbit-ſkins, ſalt-fiſh, oil, feathers, linen yarn, and coarſe linen cloth, kelp, and, in years of fruitfulneſs, corn in conſiderable quantity. The chief commodities imported are wood, flax, coal, ſugar, ſpirits, wines, ſnuff and tobacco, flour and biſcuit, ſoap, leather, hardware, broadcloth, printed linens, and printed cottons. The manufacture of linen yarn was introduced here in the year 1747, and about the year 1730, the manufacture of kelp. As the price of the latter was very low for the firſt ten years, the quantity made was but trifling. From the year 1740 to 1760 the price is reported to have been forty-five ſhillings per ton, and the money which it is believed to have brought into the country during that period near about 2000l. per annum. The average price for the ſubſequent ten years amounted to about four guineas per ton; and the whole value to the place to above 6000l. ſterling per annum. Of each ton at the market from the year 1770 to 1780, the price roſe at a medium to about 5 pounds, and the groſs ſum which the proprietors in that time received for it was not leſs than 10,000l. per annum. For 13 years preceding the year 1791, the value of a ton was neareſt to ſix pounds, and the quantity each year to the ſum of 17,000l. ſterling. Thus, in the ſpace of 50 years, the proprietors of theſe iſlands, where the ſeaſons are very deceitful, and the crops can by no means be depended upon for ſubſiſting the inhabitants, have received in addition to their eſtates, the enormous ſum of 370,000l. ſterling. Long. 0. 24. KOEI-TCHEOU, a province of China, bounded on the north by Se-tchuen, on the eaſt by Hou-quang, on the ſouth by Quang-ſi, and on the weſt by Se-tchuen. It is full of lofty mountains, and partly inhabited by people that would never ſubmit to the emperor, and who live independent of the laws of the empire. The emperors have tried ſeveral times to people this province, and have ſent thither Chineſe colonies, and governors, with their families; there are abundance of forts and places of war, where they keep ſtrong garriſons. The taxes of this province are not ſufficient to defray the expence of their ſubſiſtence, and the emperor is obliged to ſend new ſupplies every year. In the mountains there are mines of gold, ſilver, and mercury; and it is from part of this province that they get copper, with which they make all the ſmall braſs money which is in the empire. Between the mountains there are very agreeable and fruitful vallies, eſpecially near the rivers. Proviſions are cheap, but not ſo plentiful as in other places. There are no ſilks, but they make ſtuffs of a certain herb, which reſembles hemp, and is very proper for ſummer clothes. Cows and ſtags are in great plenty here, as alſo the beſt horſes of China; there are likewiſe multitudes of wild hens, which are eſteemed excellent. Koei-yang is the capital.

KOEI-TCHEOU, a city of China, of the firſt rank, in the province of Se-tchuen. This city is ſeated on the banks of the great river Kincha, or Yang-tſe, and is the key to the province, where there is a cuſtom-houſe kept to receive the duties of the merchandizes which are brought there. It is very rich, through its great commerce. There are ten towns within its juriſdiction, one of the ſecond order, and nine of the third. Although the country is mountainous, yet the induſtry of the huſbandmen has made it very fruitful. Great quantities of muſk are collected in the neighbourhood, and here are ſeveral ſprings, from which they procure ſalt. Orange and lemon-trees are very common. In the northern part the mountains are very rugged and ſteep, and inhabited by a very barbarous people, when compared with the common Chineſe: 637 miles SSW. Peking. Long. 127. E. Ferro. Lat. 31. 10. N.

KONIGSBERG, a city and ſeaport of Pruſſia, and capital of the kingdom, ſituated on the river Pregel, over which are ſeven bridges. This city was founded in the year 1255, when Ottocarus, or Premiſlaus I. king of Bohemia, came to the aſſiſtance of the Teutonic knights, againſt the Pagan Samlanders; for a caſtle was firſt built by his advice, and afterwards a town, which was named Konigſberg, in honour of that prince. In the year 1264, Konigſberg was rebuilt on another ſituation, and in 1286, obtained the privileges of Culm, as they are called. It is a large beautiful city; and the rampart, with which it was ſurrounded in the year 1526, is about 7 Engliſh miles in circumference. This rampart incloſes ſeveral gardens, the large caſtle moat, and ſome meadows and fields. The number of houſes is about 3,800; and the inhabitants amount to 60,000 ſouls. Konigſberg properly conſiſts of three towns joined together, namely, Altſtadt, Lobenicht, and Kneiphof (the two firſt lying in Samland, and the laſt in Natangen) and of ſeveral ſuburbs. Altſtadt, or the Old Town, was particularly called Konigſberg till the year 1455; but afterwards, to diſtinguiſh it from Lobenicht, was named Altſtadt. It contains 16 ſtreets, and 550 houſes, above 100 of which are malt-houſes and brew-houſes. It is embelliſhed with ſix gates, two ſtrong-built towers, and four bridges. Lobenicht, which was built about the year 1300, was formerly called Neuſtadt, or the New Town. Kneiphof is the moſt modern, or the lateſt built, of the three towns; for it was not founded until the year 1324. It ſtands on an iſland formed by the river Pregel; and for want of a ſolid foundation, the buildings are erected on piles of alder-tree, which by length of time are become as hard as iron. It has five large gates, and thirteen ſtreets. The cathedral formerly ſtood in Altſtadt, or the Old Town; but, in 1332, was built in the Kneiphof, by order of duke Luderus. In this church ſtands a ſamous organ, which conſiſts of 5000 pipes, and was finiſhed in the year 1721. The univerſity was founded in the year 1544, by the marggrave Albert, and has 38 profeſſors, excluſive of the tutors. The town-houſe is a very fine building, where the magiſtrates of the three towns, which were incorporated in 1724, meet every day, day. The ſtrong citadel, called Frederickſburg, which was built in the year 1657, ſtands directly facing Kneiphof, at the conflux of the two branches of the Pregel. This fort is a regular ſquare, ſurrounded with broad ditches and the river Pregel, which is there increaſed by the canal or dike called Kupſerteich. A church and an arſenal ſtand in the citadel. Konigſberg has always made a conſiderable figure in commerce and ſhipping, and was formerly a member of the Hanſe towns aſſociation. Its trade is ſtill in a flouriſhing condition: and the river Pregel, which is here navigable for the largeſt ſhips, and from 120 to 240 feet in breadth, renders this city very fit for commerce. In the year 1752, 493 large ſhips arrived in this port, beſides ſmaller veſſels, and 373 floats of timber. Except a colony of French Calviniſts, moſt of the inhabitants of Konigſberg are Germans, who are of the Lutheran profeſſion. In the year 1701, Frederick I. crowned himſelf king of Pruſſia with his own hands at Konigſberg: 420 miles SW. Peterſburg. Long. 20. 48. E. Greenwich. Lat. 54. 43. N.

KYBURG, a bailiwick of Swiſſerland, in the canton of Zurich, formerly a county. After the extinction of the counts of Kyburg, in the year 1264, it came to the houſe of Habſburg, and from thence to the houſe of Auſtria. Leopold, duke of Auſtria, mortgaged it to the counts of Toggenburg; this mortgage was transferred to the counts of Montfort. In the year 1415, when Frederic, duke of Auſtria, was put under the ban of the empire, the emperor Sigiſmund ſeized on the eſtate, and in 1424, permitted the citizens of Zurich to purchaſe the rights of the counts of Montfort, which they did. Thus Zurich became maſter of the county, on paying, nevertheleſs, to the emperor conſiderable ſums at five different times. In 1442, the canton of Zurich reſtored it to the emperor, Frederick III. but in 1452, purchaſed it of duke Sigiſmund for ever.

LAALAND, or Laland, an iſland of Denmark, ſituated at the entrance into the Baltic from the Greater Belt, about thirty miles in length, and twelve in its mean breadth, and reckoned the moſt fertile ſpot in the Daniſh dominions. This iſland produces plenty of all ſorts of grain, particularly very fine wheat, and excellent peaſe. It is alſo famous for a kind of red fruit, called manna, which reſembles ſweet almonds in taſte, and grows on a long ſlender ſtem. Laaland is not without woods, which, however, are more frequent on the eaſt than on the weſt of the iſland. The inhabitants make little account of grazing, as they find that the cultivation of corn turns out to greater advantage. But notwithſtanding all theſe conveniencies, as the country lies low, and the ſoil is damp, the air is very unhealthy. Of all the inhabitants of this iſland the clergy are the beſt provided for, according to their rank. The nobility are numerous here, and many of them have very fine ſeats, and conſiderable eſtates. This iſland, like Falſter, has a particular governor, but in ſpiritual affairs both are under the juriſdiction of the biſhop of Funen. Naſkow is the capital. Long. 11. 2. to 11. 48. E. LABOMAS, a town of the iſland of Cuba: 7 miles SE. Spirito Santo.

LABOUR, before the revolution, a diſtrict of France, in Gaſcony, of which Bayonne was the capital.

LABRADOR, a country of North America, in the government of Canada, bounded on the north-eaſt by Hudſon's Straits and the North Atlantic Ocean, on the ſouth-eaſt by the Straits of Belliſle, on the ſouth by Canada, and on the weſt by Hudſon's Bay. A late author, Mr. Cartwright, who, from a long reſidence of ſixteen years, had good opportunities of being well informed, ſays, " The face of the whole country, at leaſt all thoſe we are at preſent acquainted with, are very hilly, and in moſt parts mountainous. The ſouth coaſt has great appearance of fertility from the ſea, but a cloſe inſpection diſcovers the ſoil to be poor, and the verdure to conſiſt only of coarſe plants, which are well adapted to the ſupport and nouriſhment of deer and goats, but do not appear proper for horſes, kine, or ſheep. Corn might poſſibly be raiſed about the heads of the deepeſt bays, and in the interior parts of the country; but the few experiments which were made in gardens failed of ſucceſs; for the ears were ſinged by the froſt before the grain ripened. All the eaſt coaſt, as far as he went, and by what he could learn from the Eſquimaux, exhibits a moſt barren and iron-bound appearance; the mountains riſe ſuddenly out of the ſea, and are compoſed of a maſs of rocks, but thinly covered in ſpots with black peat earth, on which grow ſome ſtunted ſpruces, and a few other plants, but not ſufficient to give them the leaſt appearance of fertility; however, the ſea, rivers, and lakes, abound in fiſh, fowl, and amphibious creatures. No country is better furniſhed with large, convenient, and ſafe harbours, or ſupplied with better water; for rivers, brooks, lakes, pools, and ponds, are every where to be met with in great abundance. All along the face of the eaſt coaſt, and within the many capacious bays which indent it, are thouſands of iſlands of various ſizes, on which innumerable multitudes of eider ducks, and other water-fowl breed; the very ſmalleſt are not without their inhabitants, if the ſpray of the ſea does not fly entirely over them, and the larger ones have generally deer, foxes, and hares upon them. All kinds of fiſh which are found in the arctic ſeas abound on this coaſt; and the rivers are frequented by great abundance of ſalmon, and various ſorts of ſea trout; pike, barbel, eels, river trout, and ſome few other kinds of freſh water fiſh, are alſo found in them. A few miles from the ſea, the air becomes ſoft and warm, bare rocks no longer appear, the land is thick clothed with timber, which reaches down almoſt to high-water mark, and is generally edged with graſs. Few ſtout trees are to be met with until you have advanced a conſiderable diſtance, and have ſhut the ſea out. Nature has clothed the ground with ſpruces and firs; intermixing a few larches, birch, and aſpens, ſparingly along the edges of thoſe woods which grow adjoining to the ſhores of the bays, rivers, brooks, and ponds, where only they arrive at any degree of perfection. Labrador produces but ſeven ſorts of trees which are worthy of that appellation, viz. black, white, and red ſpruce, larch, ſilver fir, birch, and aſpen; at leaſt, if there be any others, they muſt grow on the confines of Canada. The reſt are mere ſhrubs, they are the alder, oſier, dogberry, baked pears, juniper, currants, raſpberries, with a few others. The fruits conſiſt of various kinds of berries, viz. currants, raſpberries, partridge-berries, empetum nigrum, baked apples, baked pears, whortle-berries of two ſorts, cranberries, and a ſmall berry which grows in a gravelly or ſandy ſoil, the plant of which reſembles that of the ſtrawberry, each producing but a ſingle fruit, which is of a bright pink colour, granulated like a mulberry, and has a delicious flavour. The only vegetables found by him, fit to eat, were alexander, or (wild celery) fathen, ſcurvy-graſs, the young leaves of the oſier, and of the ground whortle-berry; Indian ſallad, red docks, and an alpine plant, which the rein-deer are very fond of. Fathen, however, is no where to be met with, but where the ground has been dug. The ſoil is moſtly of a light kind, yet clay is common to be met with in moſt harbours, and in the beds of rivers, below high water mark. A ſpot of ſtrong blue clay was found near St. Lewis's Bay, on which grew good birch and other trees. The mountains of Labrador properly contain ſome kinds of ores, but none have yet been diſcovered, except that of iron, which ſeems to be in great plenty, ſince ironſtone is very common along moſt of the ſhores; ſeveral ſmall ſprings, had a weak chalybeate taſte and tinged the ground red. White ſpar is very common, and ſeveral ſamples of that beautiful one, called Labrador ſpar, has been picked up by the Eſquimaux. The birds of the country are the white-tailed eagle, falcons, hawks, and owls of various kinds; raven, white-grouſe, ptarmigan, ſprucegame, whiſtling curlew, grey plover, various kinds of ſand-pipers, and other waders; geeſe, ducks of various ſorts, ſhags, gulls, divers of various ſorts, ſwallows, martins, ſome few ſpecies of ſmall birds, ſnipes, and doves; the two laſt are very ſcarce. The beaſts are bears, both white and black, rein-deer, wolves, wolverines, foxes of various kinds, viz. black, ſilver, croſs, yellow, white, and blue; marten, lynxes, otters, mink, beavers, muſquaſh, racoons, hares, rabbits, and moles, and probably other kinds. The native inhabitants are two diſtinct nations of Indians: Mountaineers, and Eſquimaux. The Mountaineers are tall, thin, and excellent walkers; their colour greatly reſembles that of our gypſies, probably occaſioned by their being conſtantly expoſed to the weather and ſmokey whig-whams. Theſe people inhabit the interior parts of the country, which they traverſe by the aſſiſtance of canoes, covered with birch rinds, in the ſummer; and of rackets, or ſnow-ſhoes in the winter. They are wonderfully ſagacious at killing deer, otherwiſe they would ſtarve; and when they are in a part of the country, in the winter time, where deer are ſcarce, they will follow a herd by the ſlot, day and night, until they tire them quite down; when they are ſure to kill them all, that is to ſay, if the night is light enough; they reſt only four or five hours, then purſue again; which ſpace of time, being too ſhort for the deer to obtain either food or reſt, they are commonly jaded out by the fourth day. The Indians paunch and leave them, go back to their families, return immediately with bag and baggage, and remain there until they have eaten them all; when, if they have not provided another ſupply elſewhere, they look out afreſh. But when deer are plentiful, they are quickly provided with food without much trouble. As theſe people never ſtay long in a place, conſequently they never build houſes, but live the year round in miſerable whigwhams, the coverings of which are deer-ſkins and birch-rinds; the ſkins which they uſe for this purpoſe, as well as for clothes, are tainted to take off the hair, then waſhed in a lather of brains and water, and afterwards dried and well rubbed: but for winter uſe they will alſo have jackets of beaver or deer-ſkins, with the hair on." As to the morals of theſe people, Mr. Cartwright ſays he cannot ſpeak much in praiſe of them, for they are greatly addicted to drunkenneſs and theft. They profeſs the Romiſh religion, but know no more of it than merely to repeat a prayer or two, count their beads, and ſee a prieſt whenever they go to Quebec. Of the Eſquimaux, whom he called a detachment from the Greenlanders, he ſays they are the beſt tempered people he ever met with, and moſt docile; nor is there a nation under the ſun, with which he would ſooner truſt his perſon and property; although till within theſe few years, they were never known to have any intercourſe with Europeans, without committing theft or murder, and generally both. The climate is remarkably healthy, the winters are very long and ſevere, but the cold is of a pleaſant kind; never cauſing a perſon to ſhiver, as it does in England, neither could he ever obſerve, that the ſudden and great tranſitions which are ſo often experienced, had any effect on the conſtitution, nor did he know of one endemical complaint. A few miles from the ſea, the weather, in the ſummer time, is quite warm, and the air has a remarkable ſoftneſs in it; but the multitudes of moſchettos and ſand flies are intolerable grievances. On the ſea-coaſt the air is much cooler, and it is very raw and cold indeed, when the wind comes in from the ocean; occaſioned by the prodigious quantities of ice ſo immediately contiguous to the coaſt, whereby the water itſelf is always in a chilled ſtate. The buſineſs hitherto carried on by the Engliſh are the ſame with thoſe on the iſland of Newfoundland. The exports are codfiſh, ſalmon, oil, whalebone and furs; but the latter are much ſuperior to any of the ſame kind which are killed upon that iſland, and few parts of the world produce better. There are ſeveral Moravian ſettlements on the eaſt coaſt, the principal of which is Nain. Long. 55. 30. to 78. 30 W. Greenwich Lat. 50. 30. to 62. 30. N.

LACHSA, a province of Arabia, bounded on the north by the territories of the wandering Arabs, in the neighbourhood of Baſſora, on the eaſt by the Perſian Gulf, on the ſouth by Oman, and on the weſt by the province of Nesjid. It is alſo denominated Hadsjar, and ſometimes Bahrein. The latter of theſe names, in ſtrict propriety, belongs only to the iſlands of Aual. Lachſa affords no great variety of productions. Its aſſes and camels are eſteemed to be of an excellent breed, and of the latter, ſome thouſands are annually ſold into Syria. In the interior parts of this province, the inhabitants live much upon dates; upon the coaſts, pearl-fiſhing is followed with advantage; and there is a conſiderable trade in foreign commodities. This country was once a province of the Ottoman empire. The Arabs have long ſince, however, ſhaken off the Ottoman yoke. Many Turks, deſcended from the ancient pachas, ſtill remain in the province, and enjoy conſiderable eſtates; but have no ſhare in the government. The province of Lachſa belongs in ſovereignty at preſent to the ſchiech of the Arabian tribe of Beni Khaled, one of the moſt powerful in Arabia. They are ſo far ſpread through the Deſert, as often to haraſs the caravans paſſing between Bagdad and Kaleb. The greater part of Lachſa is inhabited by Bedouins, and other petty tribes; but theſe all acknowledge the dominions of the ſchiech of Beni Khaled. Little is known concerning the cities in the interior parts of this province.

LAGOON ISLAND, an iſland in the South Pacific Ocean, diſcovered by captain Cook, in the year 1769, who deſcribes it of an oval form, with a lagoon in the middle, which occupied much the larger part of it; the border of land which circumſcribes the lagoon, is in many places very low and narrow, particularly on the ſouth ſide, where it conſiſts principally of a beach or reef of rocks: it has the ſame appearance alſo in three places on the north ſide; ſo that, the firm land being disjoined, the whole looks like many iſlands covered with wood. Captain Cook approached it on the north ſide, but within a mile no bottom was found, with 130 fathom of line, nor did there appear to be any anchorage about it. The whole is covered with trees of different verdure, but none could be diſtinguiſhed, even with glaſſes, except cocoa-nuts and palm-trees. Long. 139. 28. W. Greenwich. Lat. 18. 47. S.

LANCASHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the north by Cumberland, Weſtmoreland, and Yorkſhire, on the eaſt by Yorkſhire, on the ſouth by Cheſhire, and on the weſt by the Iriſh Sea; 74 miles long, and from 15 to 44 wide. The form is irregular, not very unlike to England, Wales, and part of Scotland united; the indentations on the borders being ſimilar. A ridge of mountains ſeparates it from Yorkſhire, and continuing its courſe through ſome other counties, has been called The Backbone of England: this mountain ſcreens the county from the eaſterly winds and the attendant evils, and is thought to cauſe a greater quantity of rain than in the more interior parts of the kingdom; but does not ſeem to make the climate the leſs wholſome. Lancaſhire has ſome local advantages, which has been the cauſe of rendering the country ſo famous for its manufactures. Theſe, in a great meaſure, depend upon the two moſt material articles of coal and water; the former of which lies in immenſe beds towards the ſouthern and middle part, and the many rivers, &c. which in ſo many places interſect the country, together with the ſprings, have had no ſmall effect upon the agriculture of this diſtrict. The northern and north-eaſt diſtricts, produce lime ſtone in abundance; marle is found towards the ſouth. Beſides water and coal, this country alſo produces ſtone of various denominations. Near Lancaſter (upon the common) is an extenſive quarry of excellent free-ſtone, which admits of a fine poliſh. The county-town (Lancaſter) is built wholly of this ſtone. Flaggs and grey ſlates are dug up at Holland, near Wigan. Blue ſlates are got in large quantities in the mountains, called Coniſtone and Telberthwaite, fells near Hawkſhead. Great quantities are exported. They are chiefly diſtinguiſhed into three claſſes, viz. London, country, and tom ſlate, which are valued in proportion, London beſt, &c. Copper mines in the north have been worked, but without much ſucceſs. The beſt ſithe-ſtones are obtained at Rainford, well wrought on the ſpot. Iron ore, in large quantities, is obtained at Lindle, between Ulverſtone and Dalton. The features of this county are in many places ſtrongly marked; towards the north they are bold and pictureſque, diverſified with lofty mountains and fertile vales. The north-eaſt part of the county is rugged, interſperſed with many rivulets, with a thin ſtratum of upper ſoil: the ſouthern part more ſoftened, and the plains more fertilized: along the ſea coaſt, the land is chiefly flat, and has the appearance, in many places, as if formerly covered by the ocean. Few countries produce greater varieties of ſoil, which yet does not change ſo rapidly as in ſome others. A conſiderable tract, which lies between the Ribble and the Merſey, is a ſandy loam, well adapted to the production of almoſt every vegetable that has yet been brought under cultivation; beneath which is a clay or marl. There is alſo a black ſandy loam, ſomething diſtinct from the above deſcription, which has no red rock, but the ſubſtratum white ſand, under which is clay, and then marle. There are alſo tracks of white ſand lands, and ſome little pebbly-gravel lands. There are many large tracts, which come under the denomination of moſſes, and ſome ſtiff, but not obdurate clay lands. Lancaſter is divided into ſix hundreds, which contain 62 pariſhes, and 26 market-towns. The number of houſes is eſtimated at 40,000, and the inhabitants 240,000. The towns are Lancaſter, Liverpool, Preſton, Wigan, Newton, Clithero, all which are boroughs, and ſend two members each to the Britiſh parliament, making, with two for the county, fourteen in the whole; other towns are Mancheſter, Blackburn, Bolton, Burnlay, Bury, Cartmel, Chorley, Colne, Dalton, Garſtang, Haſlingden, Hawkſhead, Kirkham, Leigh, Ormſkirk, Poulton, Preſcot, Rochedale, Ulverton, and Warrington. The principal rivers are the Lune, Ribble, Merſey, Weaver, and Irwell.

LANCASTER, a town of England, and capital of the county to which it gives name, ſituated on the river Loyne, or Lune, which forms a harour for veſſels of moderate ſize: the town carries on a conſiderable foreign trade, and many ſhips are conſtructed in the docks. Agricola is ſaid to have formed a ſtation here, which was afterwards improved into a caſtle; and ſurrounded by a ditch as early as the time of Adrian, who placed a garriſon there. After the Norman conqueſt, it was enlarged; and in ſucceeding times became more important. The preſent ſtructure is ſuppoſed to have been erected in the reign of Edward III. and is now made uſe of as a county priſon. Lancaſter was incorporated by king John, and the charter renewed and confirmed, with greater privileges, by Charles II. It is governed by a mayor, aldermen, recorder, bailiffs, &c. and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. By means of navigable canals, Lancaſter has a communication with the rivers Merſey, Dee, Ribble, Ouſe, Trent, Severn, Derwent, Thames, Avon, Humber, &c. through the counties of York, Lincoln, Weſtmoreland, Cheſter, Warwick, Nottingham, Stafford, Worceſter, Leiceſter, Oxford, Glouceſter, &c. The merchants trade chiefly to America, the Weſt Indies, and the Baltic. The principal exports are hardware, woollen goods, cabinet work, candles, &c. Sail cloth is the chief manufacture of the town. The number of houſes is about 1160, which are ſuppoſed to contain 1600 families. There are two markets weekly, on Wedneſday and Saturday: 66 miles S. Carliſle, and 235 NNW. London. Long. 2. 46. W. Greenwich. Lat. 53. 59. N.

LANCEROTTA, one of the Canary iſlands, about ten leagues in length, and eight in breadth, where wideſt. It is parted by a ridge of mountains which afford nothing but paſture for cattle, though the vallies are fruitful, but ſandy, and thin in the ſoil. It abounds in grain, fruits, horned cattle, hares, camels, and aſſes. One great branch of the trade of Lancerotta conſiſts in dried goats' fleſh, which the inhabitants ſell in great quantities to the neighbouring iſlands, under the name of tuſſineta. In the year 1730, a volcano broke out in this iſland. Lancerotta, the principal town, contains about 100 houſes. It has ſeveral havens and roads; but there is one at the north-eaſt end, where ſhips may come in from the northward, and lie land-locked from all winds in ten, fifteen, and twenty fathoms. LANDAU, a town of France, in the department of the Upper Rhine, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Wiſſembourg, ſituated on the river Queich, which runs into the Rhine, containing four churches, and about 4000 inhabitants: it was formerly imperial; and, in the year 1291, endowed with the ſame privileges as Haguenau, by Rodolphus I. and confirmed to France in the year 1680; after which it was fortified by Louis XIV. As it is almoſt commanded, on every ſide, by eminences which ſurround it, M. Vauban exerted all his ſkill in rendering it ſtrong. In the year 1702, it was taken by the Auſtrians, and in 1703, recovered again by the French. In the year 1704, the Imperialiſts made themſelves maſters of it a ſecond time; and in 1713, it was again taken from them. In the year 1543, this town was beſieged by the emperor Charles V. with an army of 5000 men, and 50 pieces of cannon, but without ſucceſs; the year following it was ceded to the emperor, by the peace of Creſſy. In the year 1637, it was taken by the French; and retaken ſoon after by the Spaniards, who held it till the year 1655, when it was attacked by the marechals Turenne and Ferte, who became maſters of it, ten days after the trenches were opened, in ſight of the Spaniſh army, under the prince of Conde, of 35,000 men. The French, who remained in poſſeſſion, by the peace of the Pyrennées, enlarged the fortifications, and made it one of the ſtrongeſt places in the country. It has only two gates; one towards the eaſt, called the Gate of France, and the other toward the weſt, called the Gate of Queſnoy. In the year 1712, prince Eugene, of Savoy, who commanded the army of the allies, inveſted this place with thirty-four battalions and thirty ſquadrons, on the 17th of July, giving the conduct of the enterpriſe to the prince of Anhalt Deſſau; but, the French carrying the poſts of Denain, Marchiennes, and St. Amand, the ſiege was raiſed on the 31ſt of the ſame month. In the year 1794, the town was beſieged by a part of the army of the powers allied againſt France, under the conduct of the hereditary prince of Orange. The whole of the ſiege, after opening of the trenches, laſted ſcarcely ten days: yet the bombardment was ſo ſevere, that not more than three houſes were left ſtanding. Two hundred of the inhabitants, and twelve hundred of the garriſon, loſt their lives. The remainder of the garriſon, which ſurrendered priſoners of war, conſiſted of 4400 men. The ſurrender took place on the 30th of April. But it did not remain long in the poſſeſſion of the allies; for, on the 15th of Auguſt following, the garriſon which conſiſted of 20,000 men, ſurrendered at diſcretion, to the French general Scherer: 3½ poſts SE. LANGRES, a city of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Upper Marne. This town is very ancient, and, in the time of Julius Cæſar, was the capital of the Lingones. In the irruption of Attila, it was taken and burned; and, after being rebuilt, underwent the ſame fate, in the year 407, from the Vandals. It was very early erected into a biſhopric, and, from the reign of Philip Auguſtus to the revolution, the prelates were dukes and peers of France. It afterwards belonged to the kingdom of Burgundy, and fell, with the reſt of the country, to France. The ſituation is on a mountain. Cutlery forms the principal trade of the place: 12 poſts NW. Beſançon, and 34 SE. Paris. Long. 23. E. Ferro. Lat. 47. 51. N.

LANGROIVA, a town of Portugal, in the province of Beira. Here is a medicinal ſpring: 4 leagues NW. Pinhel, and 6 SSE. St. Joao da Peſqueira.

LANGSDORF, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, and principality of Solms Braunfels: 5 miles WSW. Laubach, and 3 NW. Muntzenberg.

LANGSTONE HARBOUR, a capacious harbour of England, on the coaſt of Hampſhire; but, by a bar at the mouth, the entrance for large ſhips is difficult. It is ſituated 3 miles E. Portſmouth.

LANGTON, a town of Scotland, in the county of Berwick: 1½ mile SW. Greenlaw.

LANGUARD, a river of Swiſſerland, which runs into the Rhine, 3 miles S. Mayenfeld.

LANGUEDOC, before the revolution, a large province of France, divided into Upper and Lower, bounded on the eaſt by the Rhône, which ſeparated it from Dauphiny, the county of Venaiſſin, and Provence; on the ſouth by Rouſſillon and the Mediterranean, on the weſt by Gaſcony, and on the north by Forez, Quercy, and Rouergue: its extent was about 90 leagues in length, and 40 in breadth. The land is, in general, very fertile in grain, fruits, and wine, and watered by the Rhône, the Garonne, the Tarn, the Allier, and the Gardon. There were, in this province, three archbiſhoprics, and twenty biſhoprics. Toulouſe was the capital of Upper, and Montpellier the capital of Lower Languedoc. It is now divided into ſeven departments, the Ardeſche, Lozere, Gard, Herault, Tarn, Upper Garonne, and Aude.

LANGUENBRUCK, a town of Swiſſerland, in the canton of Soleure: 14 miles NE. Soleure.

LAO-KUN-TIM, a town of Chineſe Tartary: 50 miles SW. Ning-yuen-tcheou.

LAON, a town of France, and capital of the department of the Aiſne; before the revolution, the capital of a ſmall country called Laonnois, and the ſee of a biſhop, who was a duke, and the ſecond peer of France. It contains about 8000 inhabitants: 5¾ poſts NW. Rheims, and 16½ N. Paris. Long. 21. 17. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 34. N.

LAOS, or Lao, a country of Aſia, bounded on the north by the Chineſe province of Yun-nan, on the eaſt by Tong-king, on the ſouth by Camboja, and on the weſt by Siam and Ava. It is ſurrounded on all ſides by mountains, covered with foreſts. The country ſeems to be generally flat, and to have ſcarcely any hills or mountains, but thoſe which encompaſs it on all ſides, and ſerve as barriers againſt the potent kingdoms with which it is incloſed. From theſe mountains deſcend infinite rivulets, which drain into one large river, the Mecon, that croſſes the whole region, from north to ſouth. Little is known of the diviſion of the country as to provinces. Some writers make a diſtinction between the ſouthern part, which they call Lanjan, or Lanjang, or Lan-tchan, and the northern, which they call Lao or Laho. The climate of this country is ſomewhat more temperate than that of Tong-king, and more healthful. The ſoil is generally very good, being rendered fruitful by a number of canals cut from the great river Mecon, which ſerves both to water the lands on each ſide, and carry off the ſtreams, made either by the torrents deſcending from the hills, or the great rains which fall at ſtated times. The principal drugs found in this kingdom, are benjamin and lak. As the foreſts are of great extent, and the plains enamelled with a variety of flowers, they yield abundance of honey, wax, and cotton. Here are alſo ſeveral mines of iron, lead, and tin. Gold and ſilver likewiſe are found; but the inhabitants collect thoſe metals out of certain place's of the river. Lao, properly ſo called, is divided into ſeveral provinces, among which are reckoned Kiang-ſeng, Kemerat, Leng, Lê, and Meng. The country, ſoil, and produce, are not very diſſimilar to thoſe of Lanjan, and the ſame deſcription may ſerve for both. The inhabitants are well-ſhaped and robuſt, rather fat than lean, and of an olive-colour. They are good-natured, affable, courteous, and obliging. They are free from deceit, and of great integrity; never breaking their promiſe or their truſt. This character they are zealous to acquire; and the rather, as they are ſubject to covet what belongs to others. When they ſee any thing which pleaſes their fancy, they ſeldom ceaſe importuning the owner till they obtain it, in whole or in part. However, in caſe of a refuſal, they never offer to take it by force. As the kingdom of Lao enjoys a very wholeſome air, and abounds with the neceſſaries of life, it is very populous, and the inhabitants live to a very great age. The Laos are not of a warlike diſpoſition, nor expert in the uſe of fire-arms, a circumſtance which may be owing to the advantageous ſituation of their country, encloſed with mountains and ſteep precipices; ſerving as ſo many natural fortifications, ſufficient to defend them againſt the inſults of their enemies; and ſhould any break through the ramparts, they have a way to get rid of them, by poiſoning their rivers. It was thus that the king of Tong-king was obliged to retreat, after having loſt a great number of his army, with which, about the year 1650, he propoſed to annex this monarchy to his own. Before this attempt, ſeveral petty kings, joining their forces with the ſame deſign, againſt the inhabitants of Lao, loſt ſo many of their men and beaſts, by drinking the water of a river along which they encamped, that they were at laſt compelled to retreat, without daring to croſs the ſtream and fight their enemies, who inſulted them on the other ſide. In effect, the Lanjans are very ſlothful, and averſe to buſineſs. They apply themſelves to nothing but agriculture and fiſhing. They neglect all arts and ſciences. They are much addicted to women; but their belief in witchcraft and magic is ſtill more pernicious, eſpecially as it prevails among people of rank. They have a notion, that if the head of an elephant be rubbed with wine, enriched with a drop or two of human gall, the beaſt will become more robuſt, and his owner more courageous. In this ridiculous conceit, the governors ſometimes, though but rarely, employ deſperate fellows, who for 25 or 30 crowns, will go into the foreſts to hunt men; and the firſt they meet with, they open his belly and ſtomach, while alive, and taking out the gall-bladder, cut off his head, to convince the more ſavage purchaſer he has not deceived him. In caſe the aſſaſſin does not perform his engagement in the limited time, he is obliged to kill himſelf, his wife, or child, that his employer may take out the gall of the unhappy victim. The Laos would be an almoſt faultleſs people, and free from reproach, could this horrid and cruel practice be once rooted out of the country. The diet of the Laos conſiſts of rice, fiſh, divers kinds of legumes, and the fleſh of buffaloes. They ſeldom eat veal or poultry. The Laos wear gowns cloſe to their bodies. They go with their feet bare, and the head commonly uncovered. Their hair is clipped round, and ſhort, excepting one lock on the temples, which is left to grow, and run through holes made in the ears for that purpoſe. The Laos approve of having only one wife; and ſay, that a man ought not to marry any more: but they make their female ſlaves ſubject to their pleaſure, maintaining great numbers of them, according to their quality, as well for the ſake of indulging their paſſions as for grandeur. Tee, a king who reigned in 1658, had 200 women; but there is only one of the number who is named the principal, as being the firſt with whom the man is contracted; and the reſt are conſidered only as ſecond wives. Their marriages are performed in this manner: they chooſe out the oldeſt married couple they can find, who have lived in perfect agreement together, and promiſe before them to follow their example till death. But often theſe fair promiſes are not long binding; and the parties have recourſe to very frivolous reaſons to ſeparate, and marry with others. When any of their relations die, they make a feaſt, which holds for a month; and celebrate the funeral with great magnificence. The corpſe is put in a coffin, dawbed over with a kind of bitumen. They employ great part of their time in repeating certain hymns, adapted to the occaſion; by means of which the ſoul, as they ſay, is taught the way to heaven, to the end it might not ſtay in thoſe unknown regions. After this ceremony the relations think no more of the defunct, nor ever name him: becauſe, according to the doctrine of the tranſmigration, which is received in this country, they believe the ſoul is gone to the place deſtined for it, and conſequently belongs no longer to them. The language of the Laos or Lanjans, as well as their character, are much the ſame with thoſe of the Siameſe; who, they ſay, have had the art of writing, and their ſacred language, from them: but they cannot pronounce the letters L and R. They write on the leaves of trees, like the Peguers and Malabars; but matters relating to civil affairs are inſcribed on a ſort of coarſe paper, with earthen pins. The religion of the Lanjans, and probably of all the Laos, is nearly the ſame with that which prevails in all the countries compriſed in the Farther peninſula of the Indies. They lived a long time in form of a republic, and obſerved the laws of nature, rather than thoſe of the Chineſe, their neighbours, which they, in part, followed, before they had kings, and were ſubject to their empire. The worſhip of images was, in thoſe times, unknown to them; uncorrupted as they were with the ſuperſtition of other nations. The open ſky was their temple; and they adored one being, whom they eſteemed above all things under the name of commander. In this ſimple and uncorrupted ſtate, the Lanjans continued till ſuch time as the diſciples of Shaka began to ſpread their doctrines over the Eaſt. Some will have it that they received this polluted religion from the Chineſe; but the Jeſuit Marini rather follows thoſe who think they had it from Siam. Preſently after the diſciples of Shaka arrived in this kingdom, the Lanjans ſaw themſelves ſurrounded with temples conſecrated to idols, and prieſts named talapoy, deſtined to their ſervice. The king of Laos is an abſolute independent prince, and acknowledges no ſuperior, either in temporal or ſpiritual affairs. The property of lands lies wholly in him, who diſpoſes at pleaſure of the effects belonging to his ſubjects; nor can any family in the kingdom inherit or poſſeſs any thing left to them by will.

LAO-TIM, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Petche-li: 20 miles SSE. Lan.

LAPAU, a river of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, which runs into the Luhe: 8 miles WSW. Luneburg, in the principality of Luneburg Zell.

LAPELA, a town of Portugal, in the province of Entre Duero e Minho, on the Minho: 4½ leagues E. Valença, and 1 W. Monçao.

LAPHAO, a town on the north coaſt of the iſland of Timor, in the Eaſtern Indian Sea, inhabited by Portugueſe, or deſcendants of Portugueſe, ſituated at the bottom of a bay, and containing a church, and about 60 houſes: the inhabitants are of a copper colour, with black hair; ſome trade is carried on with Batavia; ſome Chineſe junks and veſſels from Goa viſit this port, which is only ſafe from March to Auguſt; at all other times, frequent hurricanes render the harbour unſafe.

LAPLAND, a country ſituated in the northern part of Europe, belonging to Sweden, bounded on the north by the ſea, on the eaſt by the Ruſſian government of Archangel, formerly a part of Lapland, on the ſouth by Sweden and Bothnia, and on the weſt by Norway; according to the moſt moderate computation 450 miles in length, and 300 in breadth. This country is very thinly peopled in proportion to its extent, which muſt be imputed to the many inconveniences ariſing from the climate, ſoil, &c. But theſe diſadvantages, in many particulars, are perhaps exaggerated beyond the truth. This country, indeed, at firſt ſight makes but an uncouth and diſagreeable appearance. For in moſt places it abounds with rocks and mountains, whoſe ſummits ſeem to penetrate the clouds, and are covered with eternal ſnow. In other parts of it nothing is to be ſeen, for many leagues, but fens, and moraſſes, with a few ſcattered birch-trees, ſhrubs, and buſhes, ſtinted in their growth by the inclemency of the ſky. Other parts of Lapland conſiſt of barren heaths and ſandy deſerts, over-run with moſs, fern, and other unprofitable weeds; one barren wild beyond another, with little or no paſture growing on the intermediate ſpots. Beſides theſe inconveniences, the long and ſevere winters, the cold, dark and tedious winter nights, together with the vaſt depth of ſnow that covers this deſolate region, might ſeem ſufficient to deter every living creature from fixing his abode in this inhoſpitable country. And when, at laſt, the heats in the middle of the ſummer begin to warm the air, Lapland is infeſted with ſuch ſwarms of gnats and flies, that, like clouds, darken the ſky, and obſcure the light of the ſun. But notwithſtanding all theſe diſadvantages, nature has beſtowed on this dreary region ſeveral conveniences, which, if duly weighed, examined, and properly uſed, might in ſome meaſure reconcile the inhabitants to their native country. It is found by experience, that corn will grow in Lapland; and there are more dry than ſwampy ſpots, amidſt its rocks and ſandy plains; nor is it without looſe and clayey ſoils. When the ſummer heats are ſet in, the earth is here ſooner purified, and the moiſture exhaled, than in other places; that graſs and vegetables ſpring up, and the land is tilled, where, a few weeks before, winter appeared with all its horrors. Graſs will grow almoſt in every part of the country, if it be duly cultivated. Lapland abounds in variety of beaſts, birds, and fiſhes. The furs and ſkins of bears, wolves, beavers, otters, martens, elks, wild and tame rein-deers, hyenas, ermines, hares, ſquirrels; black, red, and white foxes, &c. bring a great deal of money in the country. Here are alſo wood-cocks, ſnow-birds as they are called; a ſpecies of partridges, moor-hens, ſalcons, and other large and ſmall birds. The fiſheries in this country not only afford a plentiful ſubſiſtence to great numbers of the inhabitants, but enable them to ſell a conſiderable number of them to their neighbours. The pearls found in the Lapland rivers are remarkably valuable; and ſwans, geeſe, and ſea-fowl, unknown in other countries, abound here; eſpecially in the ſouthern parts of Lapland. In the vallies and along the banks of lakes and rivers, pine, fir, birch, juniper, willow, aſp, elder, and other trees are obſerved to thrive; and a moderate plenty of wholeſome vegetables, berries, flowers, graſs, and other herbs, are produced in this country. The woods of pine-trees, which grow here, are more ſerviceable than orchards; that beneficial tree, beſides ſeveral other uſes to which it is applied, being an eſſential part of the food of the inhabitants: for a labouring man, who feeds on bread made of the pounded bark of the pine-tree, preſerves himſelf in health and vigour, without feeling his ſtrength in the leaſt impaired by it. The mountains are of a prodigious height and extent in this country, and it appears on trial that they are rich in ores and foſſils, ſuch as rock-cryſtals, purple amethyſts, topazes, loadſtones, quick-ſilver, native cinnabar, &c. The time when Lapland was firſt peopled cannot be eaſily determined, any more than the nation from which its firſt inhabitants were deſcended. That the Lapps were originally one people with the Finns ſeems inconteſtable; and, probably their ſeparation may be dated from the time when the latter began to leave off their former rude manner of life, to build regular habitations, and to apply themſelves to agriculture. They have their own peculiar language, which though in reality no more than a dialect of the Finnæan tongue, has ſome mixture of other languages, eſpecially the Swediſh and Norwegian. The Laplanders are a ſurprizing inſtance, that a whole people can ſubſiſt contentedly without plowing, ſowing, or planting, without ſpinning or weaving, brewing or baking; and without houſes or farms. They employ themſelves in feeding of herds, which is the moſt innocent and ancient occupation in the world; and as their lot is caſt in a country where winter engroſſes the greateſt part of the year, and conſequently renders it impoſſible for them to provide a ſufficient quantity of hay or fodder for great herds of cattle, to laſt the whole year, the bountiful Creator has beſtowed on them a ſpecies of animals, that require little or no trouble to provide for. This is the Rein-deer, which of all tame animals requires the leaſt attendance, and procures the greateſt profit and advantage to its owners. Theſe creatures provide for themſelves, feeding in ſummer on leaves, moſs, and graſs, of which they meet with as much as ſuffices even among the mountains; and in winter they live on a ſort of moſs, which grows in every part of Lapland. They come at this moſs by ſcraping away the ſnow with their feet; theſe animals eaſily find the ſpot where it is to be found by unerring inſtinct. During a journey of ſeveral days with a rein-deer, the only trouble a traveller is at, is either to turn them looſe or tie them to a tree, where the quantity of food they eat at a time does not exceed a handful. They have no occaſion to houſe the rein-deer, as they always lie out in the open air without any inconveniency, and when there is no danger from beaſts of prey, they turn them looſe to the woods: but when they are under any apprehenſion of danger from that quarter, the rein-deer are watched by the Lapland herdſmen. In winter the Laplander makes uſe of the rein-deer in travelling. Its fleſh, either freſh or dried, is his chief food; and his clothing, from head to foot, conſiſts of this animal's ſkin. He alſo exchanges ſome of his rein-deer for ſummer clothes and a tent, which ſerves inſtead of a houſe. The rein-deer alſo ſupplies his owner with a bed; and both winter and ſummer, with good milk and excellent cheeſe. Of the inteſtines and tendons, he makes thread and cordage; and the bones and horns the ſuperſtitious Laplander offers to his idols. In a word, the rein-deer is every thing to a Laplander, ſo that by the loſs of theſe uſeful animals he is entirely ruined. Whilſt he has rein-deer, he gives himſelf little or no concern about fiſheries, mechanic trades, or any occupation: for very few of theſe people practiſe either fiſhing or ſhooting, except it be thoſe who are not poſſeſſed of any rein-deer. Some of them are maſters of above a thouſand, and know every particular animal, by dividing them into claſſes, and giving every one of them a name. The Laplanders, with regard to their manner of living and habitation, conſiſt of two different tribes, namely, the foreſt and the mountain Laplanders. The former ſpend the greateſt part of the ſummer in the woods, and have no property, but the latter live among mountains. The food of the former is moſtly fiſh and fowl; whereas the latter chiefly depend on their herds of rein-deer. The Laplanders in general, and eſpecially the foreſters, are reckoned exceeding good markſmen. They have a great averſion to mining, though ſome of them have found their account in working in ſuch mines as were contrived by others, or in carrying away the ore with the rein-deer. In moſt of the lapmarks, the Lapps make it their employment to carry the burghers to the yearly fairs; and ſome of the former, for a reaſonable reward, uſually look after the rein-deer belonging to any of the townſmen in ſummer time. Moſt of the Laplanders chooſe rather to ſleep away the whole day in their tents, than to put their hands to any work; eſpecially if they can live without it: others, however, whom pinching want has prompted to induſtry, give evident proofs that this people do not want a capacity for mechanic trades, nor even for exquiſite pieces of workmanſhip. Their boats and many other utenſils, which they make for uſe and ornament, are plain indications of their ſkill; and their ſledges are very curiouſly inlaid, with horn of all kinds of figures. Their horn ſpoons, their runen-ſtabe or runic kalenders, with their moulds for caſting pewter utenſils, their bows and arrows, their packs of cards, and the like, are all of their own making. As grazing or feeding their herds of rein-deer, is the chief employ of the Laplanders, they are obliged to ſhift their habitation very often in a year. For in winter time, when the mountain Lapps come down into the woods, they are hardly ever obſerved to continue a fortnight together in one place. At the approach of ſpring, moſt of them, with all their families, take a journey of twenty or thirty Swediſh miles among the mountains of Norway, as far as the North Sea, where they fix their abode till autumn; and then they quit the mountains, for otherwiſe they would be frozen to death for want of fuel, and their rein-deer would be ſtarved; there being no moſs for them to feed on. They ſpend the ſummer upon the mountains, as the lands for which they pay taxes to the crown lie there; for in the winter, whilſt they live amongſt the woods, they take up tracts of land which belong to other people, for which they alſo make them acknowledgment. Beſides, the rein-deer thrives beſt on the mountains in the ſummer ſeaſon. Their manner of living, indeed will not admit of dwelling conſtantly in one place, as is manifeſt from the Lapps that dwell in the village diſtricts, or live by fiſhing, over all the Lapmarks; who, though they make no excurſions to the mountains, yet they never ſettle in one place; but whilſt they fiſh, or look after their rein-deer, rove from place to place, and from one lake to another. This the rein-deer, in ſome meaſure, oblige them to do; for at a certain time they ſhow a diſpoſition to remove, whether their owners will or not, either for want of fodder, or becauſe they are ſenſible of the approach of ſpring. This unſettled way of life lays the Lapps under the neceſſity of providing themſelves with portable dwellings; and ſuch are their tents, the conſtruction of which is as follows: they firſt ſet up ſeveral poles or ſtakes, in a circular poſition, gradually cloſing together towards the top, almoſt in the form of an imperfect cone, or a ſugar-loaf, with the top of it broken off. Over theſe poles they lay a kind of coarſe cloth, which the Swedes call Walmar, or pine-boughs. One of theſe booths generally has room for twenty perſons. The hearth is in the middle of the tent, with ſtones laid round it, to prevent the fire from ſpreading. An aperture is left at the top, where the poles almoſt join, which ſerves both for chimney and window. From this hole hang two iron chains, with hooks at the end of them, to hang the pots on, in order to boil their victuals, or melt the ice or ſnow into water to drink. Round the inſide of the tent they lay their clothes, to keep out the cold wind, and ſpread branches of birch or fir round the tent, by way of ſeats to ſit on, for they have neither chairs, ſtools, nor benches. About the tent ſtand the cupboards or pantries, where they keep their proviſions on poſts or blocks of wood, ſo that they look ſomething like the pigeon-houſes, which are erected on pillars. This is done as a ſecurity againſt vermin. Their carriages are a kind of ſledges, which are ſhaped like ſmall boats with a broad keel, and of ſuch a thickneſs, that no water can penetrate through them. They have alſo a back board for the traveller to lean againſt, who ſits faſt laced in the ſledge, and well ſecured from the cold. This vehicle is drawn by the rein-deer, and generally thoſe of the wild ſpecies, and carried with incredible ſwiftneſs through foreſts and valleys, and over mountains. The rein-deer is harneſſed with a large cloth girt, embroidered with pewter-wire, faſtened on his back. The bit is a piece of thick leather, tacked to the reins of the bridle, which goes over the head and neck of the deer; and from the breaſt a leather ſtrap paſſes under the creature's belly, and is faſtened to the fore part of the ſledge, ſo that it ſerves inſtead of ſhafts to the carriage. In ſummer time, the rein-deer in a great meaſure loſe their vigour and celerity: however, they do very well for carrying the Laplander's effects from one place to another, if they are loaded in a proper manner. Beſides theſe ſledges, the Laplanders uſe a kind of ſkidders or ſkates. In ſummer time the Laplanders, eſpecially thoſe who practiſe fiſhing, and live in South Lapland, make uſe of a kind of boat, or little barque, for croſſing rivers, &c. Theſe are made of very ſlight boards, curiouſly joined together with filaments of the roots of trees, or hempen ſtrings; and are ſo light, that a Laplander carries his boat on his ſhoulders, with the oars and every thing belonging to it, beſides his proviſion-bag, wherever he pleaſes. They ſteer them with prodigious dexterity even among rocks, and down the moſt rapid water-falls; and though the cataract be never ſo frightful, and the Laplander ever ſo great a ſtranger to it, yet he undauntedly ventures down the precipice in his little boat. When he goes againſt the ſtream, and comes to a water fall he puts aſhore, takes his little boat upon his back, and travels on till he comes to ſmooth water. In the northern Lapmarks, they uſe longer boats, which are four or five fathoms or more in length. Thoſe are either haled up the water-falls with ropes, or in the leſs rapid caſcades are ſhoved up with poles, by two men, one of whom ſits at the head, and the other at the ſtern. As for going down the water-falls with the ſtream, they look upon it as attended with no difficulty. In the month of September, before the cold weather and piercing froſt ſet in, they kill what numbers of their rein-deer they think will ſuffice till Chriſtmas, after that they kill as many as will ſerve them the reſt of the year, when they are fatteſt; and ſometimes they kill one or two occaſionally. The more wealthy ſort among the Laplanders, ſometimes, in ſummer, buy Norway cows and ſheep, which they milk, and afterwards kill for their winter proviſions. They alſo eat the fleſh of bears and beavers, ſea and wild-fowl, &c. The poorer ſort among the Laplanders, who live in the villages, even content themſelves with the fleſh of dogs, wolves, foxes, horſes, &c. to ſatisfy their craving appetites. The fiſhing Laplanders live on the fiſh they catch. In ſummer they buy their ſalt from the Norwegians; and in the winter time they purchaſe it of the burghers. Tobacco is not very rare among them; but is ſold at a high price. None of the women have any hand in dreſſing the victuals; that being the office of the maſter of the houſe, aſſiſted by his ſervants. They never omit ſaying grace before and after meat, nor to ſhake one another by the hand before they riſe from the table. Their drink is chiefly water. Marriages among the Laplanders depend wholly on the pleaſure of the parents, who pay no manner of regard to the diſpoſition of their children. They ſeem to diſapprove of marriages among relations, and even intimate friends; and polygamy has never obtained among them either in ancient or modern times. The Laplanders are generally of a brown and ſwarthy complexion, which ſeems the neceſſary conſequence of their ſordid way of living, and being ſo much in the ſmoke and expoſing themſelves in all weathers. They are generally of a middling ſtature. The change of dreſs is unknown among them. Though the inhabitants of all the Swediſh Lapmarks profeſs the Chriſtian religion; yet in many parts ſuch groſs ignorance and errors prevail, as have but very little tincture of Chriſtianity; the only ſign of it conſiſting in their being baptized, and calling themſelves by the name of Chriſtians. What renders them extremely tenacious of their Pagan rites and cuſtoms, is the high idea they entertain of their anceſtors, looking upon whatever they did as reaſonable, juſt, and commendable. As to their mythology, they term the Supreme God and Sovereign of all things, and of good ſpirits, Jubnel; and the prince or chief of the evil ſpirits they call Perkmel. But as they attribute to an evil ſpirit, an equality of power with God, it is no wonder that, like other Pagans, they ſhould endeavour to obtain the favour of this evil being, and render him propitious, that he may not hurt or annoy them. Thor or Ajike they look upon as a kind of God that is both good and an evil being at the ſame time. Beſides theſe and ſome other deities, they likewiſe have a great many demi-gods. As for images, they make them both of wood and ſtone; but they pay the greateſt reverence to the latter ſort. They generally bring the horns and bones of their rein-deer to the altar of offerings. When the Laplanders come within ſight of the place where the idol ſtands, they uncover themſelves, make bows, and creep on their hands and feet to the ſtones, where they make their offerings. Moſt people have heard of their magic drums; but the Laplanders are ſo cautious in the uſe of theſe implements, that their own country-men ſcarce know any thing of them. Indeed, if any perſon is detected in practiſing with theſe drums, it coſts him his life. They are ſuppoſed to uſe theſe drums as oracles; for they imagine that by means of various figures, painted on the head of the drum, they can know what paſſes in different places, whether they ſhall meet with ſucceſs in hunting; what offerings will be moſt agreeable to their gods; with the cauſes and cure of certain diſtempers, &c. Bear-hunting, in particular, is preceded by many rites and ceremonies. It is not uncommon among them, ſometimes to mingle God's word, and ſeveral Chriſtian rites, with their magical ſuperſtitious practices. The Lapps, in general, acknowledge the king of Sweden for their rightful ſovereign; though ſome of them pay tribute to Denmark and Ruſſia, as at certain times of the year, they pitch their tents &c. within the dominions of thoſe crowns. However they conform to the Swediſh laws, attend the celebration of divine ſervice in Swediſh churches, and apply to the Swediſh courts of judicature all over Lapland. Lapland is divided into ſeven provinces or Lapmarks, which derive their name from the places of note in Nordland, in whoſe neighbourhood they lie, viz. Jamtland, Aſele, Umea, Pitea, Lulea, Tornea, and Kiemi. There are neither towns, nor any fixed or meaſured miles in any of the Lapmarks.

LAPPINEN, a town of Pruſſian Lithuania: 14 miles W. Tilſit.

LAPPOJOCK, a river of Eaſt Bothnia, which runs into the ſea, about 5 miles below Ny Karleby.

LARACHA, a ſeaport of Africa, in the empire of Morocco, on the river of Luccos, near the Atlantic Ocean. The environs are interſected by woods and ſome marſhes. Laracha was fortified at the end of the ſixteenth century; in the year 1610, it was given up to the Spaniards, and retaken in the year 1689. A fort, built by the Spaniards on the land ſide, yet remains, and the caſtle on the ſide of the road is defended by batteries cloſe to the water's edge. In the year 1765, the French purſued two corſairs into the river, and bombarded the town. Europeans formerly carried on ſome commerce here, and the river is of good depth; but, in the year 1780, all the merchants were, by command of the emperor, compelled to retire from the place. The large veſſels of the emperor uſually winter here, as there are magazines for the refitting of veſſels, but no docks for building; the wood proper for which is too diſtant, and the ſoil, which is merely ſand, not being ſufficiently firm for the erecting of ſtocks. The road of Laracha is inſecure in winter, when the winds freſhen from the weſt and ſouth-weſt; but there is no danger between the beginning of April and the end of September: 33 miles S. Tangiers. Long. 11. 20. E. Ferro. Lat. 35. 15. N.

The Turks have ſeveral moſques. In the year 1669, the grand ſignior held his court here during the ſiege of Candy. The ſituation is pleaſant, on a riſing ground. The Turks call it Geniſahar, or Jeng-iſchahir : 308 miles WSW. Conſtantinople, and 220 SW. Adrianople. Long. 40. 12. E. Ferro. Lat. 39. 45. N.

LARISTAN, a province of Perſia, at one time an independent kingdom, under the deſcendants of Koſroes, king of Perſia ; bounded on the north and eaſt by Kerman, on the ſouth by the Perſian Gulf, on the weſt by Farſiſtan. The air is unwholeſome, and varies often from extreme heat to ſudden cold ; the water fit for uſe is very rare. That in general found in the country is ſaid to breed worms in the legs and thighs of thoſe who drink it. The principal trade of the inhabitants is in camels. Lar is the capital.

LARKENTING, a town of Aſia, in Thibet : 55 miles ENE. Tchiatam.

LARNAGE, a town of France, in the department of the Drôme, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Valence : 10 miles N. Valence.

LARNE, a town of Ireland, in the county of Antrim, ſituated at the mouth of a river of the ſame name, near the north channel of the Iriſh Sea : 8 miles N. Carrickfergus, and 16 NE. Antrim. Long. 5. 43. W. Greenwich. Lat. 54. 51. N.

LARNE (Lough), a bay on the eaſt coaſt of Ireland, between the iſland Magee, and the coaſt of Antrim, ſo called from the town of Larne, which is ſituated at the north-weſt extremity, about 6 miles long and 1 wide.

LARNHE, a ſea-port town on the ſouth coaſt of the iſland of Cyprus ; the ſee of a Greek biſhop, and the reſidence of ſeveral European conſuls. The Turks have a moſque, and the Greeks three Churches. In Larnic, or rather in the whole iſland of Cyprus, there are people belonging to ſix European nations : French, Engliſh, Tuſcans, Neapolitans, Venetians, and Raguſans, each have their reſpective conſul, except the Tuſcans ; theſe are under the protection of the Engliſh conſul, who is honoured even with the title of vice-conſul of Tuſcany. There are here alſo Imperialiſts, Danes, Swiſs, Dutch, and Genoeſe ; but as all theſe have long ceaſed to carry on commerce by themſelves, they entruſt their commiſſions to correſpondents, whom they have amongſt the other nations eſtabliſhed in this iſland : 10 leagues SW. Famagoſta.

LAUSANNE, a town of Swiſſerland, in the canton of Berne, about half a league from the Lake of Geneva. It is the largeſt town in the country of Vaud, and is pretty well built, on a very uneven tract of land, formed by three ſmall hills. This town, though partly ſubject to its biſhop, enjoys, nevertheleſs, ſome conſiderable privileges, granted by ſeveral emperors. Its laws were reduced to a regular code in 1368, under the title of placitum generale, or the general will. In 1525, it concluded an alliance with Berne and Fribourg, and in 1536, ſubmitted itſelf to the canton of Berne; which granted it many new privileges, in addition to thoſe it before poſſeſſed. Pierre Viret introduced a reformation in the year 1536, which extended through the whole country of Vaud, after a diſputation held at Lauſanne the ſame year. This place is doubtleſs indebted for its fame and aggrandiſement to the transfer of the biſhop's ſee from Avenche, which took place at the latter end of the ſixth century. It afterwards became celebrated for the council held there in 1448, in which Felix V. reſigned the pontificate, in order to give peace to the church. The dioceſe of the biſhop comprehended the greater part of the cantons of Berne, Soleure, and Fribourg, the country of Vaud, the principality of Neufchatel, Bienne and its territory, and the country of Erguel, and extended almoſt to Franche Comté. Since the reformation, it is reduced to little more than the canton of Fribourg and a part of that of Soleure. Lauſanne chooſes its own magiſtracy, which conſiſts of a burgomaſter, five bannerets, the lower council, the council of ſixteen, and the great council. An academy was eſtabliſhed here in 1537, and a college in 1540. The bailiwick of Lauſanne is one of the moſt extenſive of the canton. The bailiff has ſucceeded to the biſhop. He reſides in his chateau, and has juriſdiction over the ſame places that the biſhop had. A new bailiff is choſen every ſix years, when an oath is adminiſtered to him to maintain the ancient rights and franchiſes of the town. The air is very pure and healthy; there is plenty of excellent water. In a word, every neceſſary of life is here found in the greateſt abundance: 41 miles SW. Berne. Long. 24. 16. E. LEBUS, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and Middle Mark of Brandenburg, ſeated on the Oder, being 1200 paces in length, taken in a direct line, though formerly much larger, and containing about 4,000 inhabitants, with three churches. This town has been frequently ſacked. It lies low, among hills, ſo that it cannot be ſeen at one view, and, therefore, makes but a mean appearance. It was originally ſubject to Poland, but afterwards devolved on Boleſlaw, duke of Sileſia, who, in 250, bequeathed both the town and its lordſhip to the marggraves, Otho and John, of Brandenburg. In 1354, the elector, Louis the Roman, left the caſtle and city of Lebus to the biſhopric, to which it afterwards alſo gave title. The biſhop's caſtle here was deſtroyed by a fire, in 1631. The biſhopric of Lebus was founded in the year 965, in Red Ruſſia, by the Poliſh prince Micziſlaw, but the particular place of its ſee is not known. That prince's ſucceſſor, Boleſlaw, ſettled and improved this biſhopric, which at firſt, however, bore not the name of Lebus. About the year 1300, it was called the biſhopric of Goritz; but at length the biſhopric of Lebus, on occaſion of that city's being added to its territories, which name it likewiſe retained after the building of the cathedral at Furſtenwalde. Lebus was always municipal; inſomuch, that on the biſhop's being regiſtered in the matricula, in 1521, not only the elector of Brandenburg, but likewiſe the biſhop himſelf, remonſtrated againſt it. On the deceaſe of biſhop John VIII. in 1555, the management of the dioceſe was committed to the care of the marggrave, Joachin Frederick, of Brandenburg, who, on his acceſſion to the electoral dignity, in 1598, ſecularized the biſhopric, and at the ſame time ſuppreſſed the chapter: 5 miles N. Franckfort on the Oder, and 7 SSW. Cuſtrin.

LECASELLO, a town of Italy, in the ſtate of Genoa: 23 miles NE. Genoa.

LECCE, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Otranto, the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Otranto. The wool produced in the environs of this place was formerly much celebrated; the country yields abundance of almonds and olives. It contains, beſides, the cathedral, three pariſh churches, and ſeveral convents. It is the reſidence of the governor, and is ſometimes called the capital of Otranto; and by ſome the province is called Lecce inſtead of Otranto: 17 miles NW. Otranto, and 192 E. Naples. Long. 35. 55. E. Ferro. Lat. 40. 38. N.

LEEDS, a town of England, in the county of York, ſituated on the river Aire, and on the great canal, which is navigable from Liverpool. It is governed by a mayor, recorder, twelve aldermen, twenty-four common councilmen, &c. but ſends no members to parliament. Leeds has been a long time famous for the woollen manufacture, and is one of the largeſt and moſt flouriſhing towns in the county, yet had but one church till the reign of Charles I. It now contains three, a Preſbyterian meeting-houſe, erected in 1691, called the New Chapel, which is the ſtatelieſt, if not the oldeſt, of that denomination in the north of England; and in the town and its ſuburbs ſeveral others. In 1786 the firſt ſtone of a general infirmary was laid at Leeds, and which is ſince finiſhed. It is noted for ſome medicinal ſprings. Here are two magnificent halls, both built about the year 1714, one uſed for an aſſembly room, the other is the guild, or moot-hall. Its increaſe of building, in the year 1786, was nearly 400 houſes. The antiquity of Leeds is very great, but it was not incorporated till the reign of Charles the Firſt. The manufacture and trade of Leeds are principally in cloth, the market for which is not, perhaps, to be equalled in the world. There are two ſpacious halls for the accommodation of the clothiers, and alſo a third hall, where worſted goods are expoſed to ſale. At about ſix o'clock in the ſummer, and about ſeven in the winter, the market bell rings; upon which in a few minutes, without hurry, noiſe, or the leaſt diſorder, the whole market is filled, all the benches covered with cloth, as cloſe to one another as the pieces can lie longways, each proprietor ſtanding behind his own piece. As ſoon as the bell has ceaſed ringing, the factors and buyers of all ſorts enter the hall, and walk up and down between the rows, as their occaſions direct. When they have pitched upon their cloth, they lean over to the clothier, and by a whiſper in the feweſt words imaginable, the price is ſtated; one aſks, the other bids, and they agree or diſagree in a moment. In a little more than an hour all the buſineſs is done, ten or twenty thouſand pounds worth of cloth, and ſometimes much more, are bought and ſold with a whiſper only; the laws of the market here being more ſtrictly obſerved than at any other place in England. On account of the trade, the rivers Aire and Calder were made navigable, at the expence of ſeveral private merchants, without calling in the aſſiſtance of the nobility and gentry. By this means a communication was opened from Leeds and Wakefield to York and Hull; ſo that all the woollen manufactures exported are carried by water to Hull. There is another trade in this part of the country, become very conſiderable ſince the opening of the above navigation, which is the carriage of coals down from Wakefield and Leeds; near both which places they have inexhauſtible ſtores. Theſe are carried quite down into the Ouſe, and then either go up that river to York, or down to the Humber, where the Trent and Ouſe meet together, and which in a few miles falls into the ſea. In this paſſage abundance of large towns are ſupplied with coal, with this advantage too, that whereas the Newcaſtle coals pay four ſhillings per chaldron duty to the public, theſe being only river-borne coals, are exempted, and pay nothing; ſo that the city of York, which ſtrenuouſly oppoſed the firſt navigation of theſe rivers, in this particular, as well as many others, experiences daily benefits from it: 24 miles SW. York, and 192 W. London.

LEEDS, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Virginia, on the north ſide of the Rappahanoc river: 28 miles SE. Falmouth. Long. 77. 3. W. Greenwich. Lat. 38. 10. N.

LEGHI, a town of Arabia, in the province of Yemen: 56 miles ENE. Aden.

LEGHORN, a city and ſea-port of Italy, in the duchy of Tuſcany, handſome, but not large, and built in the modern taſte, ſo regular that both gates are ſeen from the market-place. Upon account of its being interſected with canals, it is called the New Venice. Leghorn was formerly a place of no note, belonging to the Genoeſe, and by them given in exchange to duke Coſmo I. for the town of Sarzana. Since this time it has put on a quite different aſpect. The canals cut in ſeveral parts about the town have rendered the marſhes fit for culture, and in ſome meaſure diſſipated the noxious effluvia, though the air cannot ſtill be deemed perfectly healthy. Freſh water is ſo ſcarce that it muſt be brought from Piſa. The city, beſides its good fortifications, has two ſmall forts towards the ſea, and a citadel on the land ſide. The number of its inhabitants is computed at 50,000, among whom are upwards of 15,000 Jews, who live in a particular quarter of the city, have a handſome ſynagogue, and, though ſubject to very heavy impoſts are in a thriving condition, the greateſt part of the commerce of this city going through their hands. The generality of the Greeks and Armenians ſettled here acknowledge the pope's ſupremacy, and each have their peculiar church. The free Turks, and the Turkiſh ſlaves have a moſque, but the Proteſtants are not permitted the public exerciſe of their religion, the Engliſh excepted, who, by being, of all foreign nations, the beſt cuſtomers to Leghorn, are allowed to have a chaplain. Other Proteſtants make uſe of chaplains of ſhips. Proſtitutes live in a particular quarter, conſiſting of ſeveral ſtreets. The heavy taxes, payable to the grand duke, from a multiplicity of neceſſaries brought in from the continent, together with his monopolies of brandy, tobacco, and ſalt, make proviſions and other commodities very dear. The trade of Leghorn is very conſiderable, being greatly promoted by the freedom of its port, every bale of goods, whether great or ſmall, paying only two piaſtres, or ſcudi. The harbour is divided into the outward and inward; the latter ſerves only for the four or five gallies, kept by the duke; which are ſometimes ſent to ſea againſt the Corſairs, under the command of a knight of St. Stephen. In the open place before this harbour, ſtands a marble ſtatue of Ferdinand I. and at the angles of the pedeſtal four brazen ſtatues, of a gigantic ſize, repreſenting four Turkiſh ſlaves, in chains. The outward harbour is formed by a mole, or dam, 600 common paces in length, well paved, and with a partition wall in the middle, whereby, at any time, the ſhipping are ſheltered from the wind on one ſide. This mole ſerves alſo for a promenade. The harbour is too ſhallow for large ſhips, which, on this account, lie out of the mole, moored to pillars and large iron rings; but, by this means, are in ſome reſpects ſafer than in the harbour itſelf. The road, for a mile or two ſeaward, is very good, though with no ſecurity againſt winds or corſairs. The light-houſe, where, every night, thirty burning lamps are contained in one lantern, ſtands on a ſingle rock, in the ſea; and not far from it, on the main land, is the lazaretta, where quarantine is performed by perſons and goods coming from places ſuſpected of infection. Leghorn is a biſhop's ſee, with an inquiſition, but having power only over Roman Catholics, and in no other caſes than thoſe of religion: 47 miles WSW. Florence, and 140 NNW. Rome. Long. 28. E. Ferro. Lat. 43. 32. N.—On the 28th of June, 1796, this city was taken poſſeſſion of by the French, under the command of general Buonaparte.

LEIBNITZ, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Stiria, on the Sulm: 16 miles S. Gratz.

LEICESTER, a town of England, and capital of the county to which it gives name, ſaid to have been built by king Lear. However that may be, it is certainly a place of great antiquity, and was a town before the Romans invaded Britain. It is ſituated on the Soar. It is large, well built, and populous, containing five churches, a Roman Catholic chapel, and other places of worſhip. Before the caſtle was diſmantled, it was a prodigious building, it being the court of the great duke of Lancaſter, who added twenty-ſix acres to it, which he encloſed with a high wall, and called it his Novum Opus, now the Newark, where are ſtill the beſt houſes in all Leiceſter; and they continue extra-parochial, as being under caſtle-guard, by an old grant from the crown. Its hall and kitchen are ſtill entire, the former of which is lofty and ſpacious, and the courts of juſtice, which are held here at the aſſizes, are at ſuch a diſtance as not to diſturb each other. The market, which is on Saturday, abounds with every ſpecies of good living, and is, for an inland town, remarkably well ſupplied with fiſh. The fairs in Leiceſter are upon a large ſcale, particularly in the articles of cheeſe, ſheep, and cattle; Smithfield market, on its greateſt days, bears no ſort of proportion to the beaſts ſhown in Leiceſter at two or three fairs in the year. In the Domſday-book, this town is ſtyled a city, and had the title of mayor given to its chief magiſtrate in the reign of Henry III. A parliament was held at Leiceſter in the reign of Henry V. wherein the firſt law was made for burning heretics. It is the largeſt, beſt-built, and moſt populous town in the ſhire. Its corporation conſiſts of a mayor, recorder, ſteward, bailiff, 24 aldermen, 48 common-council, a town-clerk, &c. and had its charter from king John, and its freemen are toll-free in all the markets and fairs in England. This town derives great advantages from its manufactures, particularly of ſtockings. A navigable canal is lately made from Leiceſter to Loughborough. Leiceſter ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament: 27 miles NNE. Coventry, and 98 NNW. London.

LEICESTER, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Maſſachuſetts, where is an academy, eſtabliſhed in 1784.

LEICESTERSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the north by Derbyſhire and Nottinghamſhire, on the eaſt by Lincolnſhire and Rutlandſhire, on the ſouth by Northamptonſhire, and on the weſt by Warwickſhire and Staffordſhire; 40 miles from north to ſouth, and 30 from eaſt to weſt. It is divided into ſix hundreds, which contain twelve market towns, and 200 pariſhes. The ſoil in the county at large varies pretty much, from a light ſandy or gravelly loam, to a ſtiff marly loam, including all the intermediate degrees poſſible between theſe two extremes. Very little of the land can (with propriety) be called a mere ſandy or gravelly ſoil; nor is there any great quantity of it that may be properly called clay. The beſt ſoil is generally upon the hills; and the worſt, or neareſt approaching to clay or cold lands, is the valleys; though there are many exceptions to this rule. The ſoil, or what the farmers call mould, is generally deep, which makes it very proper for graſs, ſuch deep ſoils not being very ſoon affected by dry weather. The climate is generally temperate, and the country well watered. The principal rivers are the Anker, Avon, Soar, Swift, Welland, and Wreke. Leiceſterſhire is to be conſidered as a county of agriculture, rather than manufacture; though in the article of ſtockings the latter is conſiderable. The breed of large black draught horſes and horned cattle, as well as of ſheep, has been long celebrated, but within theſe few years the latter have been brought to an aſtoniſhing degree of excellence, which ſeems to have been principally owing to the great judgment and care of Mr. Bakewell, of Diſhley, originally, whoſe plan has ſince been purſued by others. A gentleman, who publiſhed a view of the agriculture of the county, ſays, "There are different breeds of ſheep in the county: the new Leiceſter, the old Leiceſter, and the foreſt ſheep. The Diſhley, or new Leiceſter, bears down every other breed before it; and I have no doubt but in the courſe of a very few years this breed will be diſperſed through every county in England," &c. The leading idea is, to procure that breed which, on a given quantity and quality of food, will pay the moſt; and thoſe people who have tried them, are convinced that the Diſhley breed will live where many other breeds would ſtarve; and that the more beautiful the form the hardier the animal is of every kind. Nothing can ſhow the high eſtimation this breed is held in, clearer, than the high prices they have fetched lately at different ſales. In the year 1793, 130 ewes, the property of one perſon, were ſold, at an average, for 25 guineas each; and at another ſale, one bull and four cows were ſold for 331l. 5s. 6d. The towns are Leiceſter, Aſhby de la Zouch, Boſworth, Hallaton, Harborough, Lutterworth, Melton Mowbray, Mount Sorrel, Billeſdon, Hinkley, Loughborough, and Waltham on the Wold. Four members are returned to the Britiſh parliament, viz. two for the county, and two for the town of Leiceſter.

LEICHLINGEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and duchy of Berg: 4 miles S. Solingen.

LEINA, a river of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, which riſes two miles SW. Worbis, in the territory of Eichfeld, paſſes by Heligenſtadt, Gottingen, Hanover, &c. and joins the Aller, about 2 miles below Zell.

LEININGEN, or Linange, a county of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, almoſt ſurrounded by the palatinate, and bordering on the biſhoprics of Worms and Spire. The ſoil is fertile in corn, fruit, and wine: in the foreſt is plenty of game, with mines of copper and iron, and quarries of ſtone. It pays forty florins for a Roman month, and forty rixdollars, thirty-four kruitzers, to the chamber of Wetzlar.

LEININGEN, or Linange (New), a town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, and county of Leinengen, held in common with the biſhop of Worms, who poſſeſſes half of it as a fief. The caſtle was demoliſhed by the French: 11 miles SW. Worms, and 30 S. Mentz. Long. 25. 44. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 30. N.

LEINENGEN (Old), a caſtle and village of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, and county of the ſame name: 3 miles SW. New Leiningen.

LEINSTER, the eaſtern province of Ireland, which contains the twelve following counties, viz. Louth, Meath, Dublin, Wicklow, Wexford, Kilkenny, Carlow, Kildare, Queen's County, King's County, Weſt Meath, and Longford. Leinſter is bounded by Ulſter on the north, by Connaught and Munſter on the weſt and ſouth-weſt, and by the ſea on the ſouth and eaſt. Its length is 104 miles, the breadth about 55 miles, and the circuit 360 miles; and includes 992 pariſhes, one archbiſhopric, and three biſhoprics. It is, in general, well cultivated, and enjoys good air and ſoil, and is the moſt populous, containing the capital and the ſeat of the government. The principal rivers are the Boyne, Barrow, Liffey, Noir, and May.

LEINUGEN, or Leinungen, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, and county of Mansfeld: 6 miles SW. Wippra.

LEIPHEIM, a town of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, and territory of Ulm, on the ſouth ſide of the Danube, ravaged and pillaged in the year 1634; 22 miles WNW. Augſburg, and 11 NE. Ulm.

LEIPNIZ, a town of Moravia, in the circle of Prerau: 6 miles NE. Prerau.

LEIPPE, a town of Sileſia, in the principality of Neiſſe: 2½ miles NE. Grotkau.

LEIPSICK, or Leipzig, a city of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and capital of a circle of the ſame name. This is one of the fineſt, and moſt celebrated towns in all Germany, ſituated in a pleaſant and fertile plain, on the river Pleiſſe. Its circuit is eſtimated at 8954 paces; but the ſuburbs are well built, and large, and furniſhed with gardens. Between the town itſelf and the ſuburbs, a fine walk of lime trees was laid out, in the year 1702, which runs quite round the town. In the town-ditches, alſo, are planted mulberry-trees. It is the ſeat of a very flouriſhing and famous univerſity, which was founded and dedicated, in 1409, and conſiſts of four nations, namely, of the Miſnian, Saxon, Bavarian or Franconian, and the Poliſh, and contains in it ſix colleges; as alſo, of two good Latin ſchools, and likewiſe, of two celebrated ſocieties, as, namely, a German ſociety, and another for the encouragement of the liberal arts. Leipzig is alſo one of the four towns where the contingents of the empire are paid in; and likewiſe, one of the principal trading towns in all Germany, inaſmuch as it enjoys not only an important foreign trade, but alſo, at its three celebrated fairs, which are kept at Eaſter, Michaelmas, and the beginning of the new year, carries on a very extenſive commerce, both in domeſtic and foreign wares. It is likewiſe poſſeſſed of the ſtaple right, by virtue of which all ſtaple commodities, imported within 60 miles round, muſt be unladen here, at leaſt, for three days, and offered to ſale to ſuch of the trading and mercantile people here, as are burghers; and then, for the firſt time, carried farther, but to be unladen no where elſe. The Pleiſſenburg here, is a ſtrong citadel on the Pleiſſe, where a mint was founded in 1752. Here, alſo, in a chapel, the Roman Catholics perform their worſhip. In the centre of the town is a ſpacious and fine market-place, near which alſo the council-houſe ſtands. The exchange is well built, and the roof of its hall well painted. Here are eight pariſh churches for Lutherans, beſides the Roman Catholic chapel, and a place of worſhip for Calviniſts. Various ſorts of manufactures are carried on in this town, gold, ſilver, ſilk, wool and linen yarn, being worked here, in all manner of ſtuffs, velvets, ſtockings, cloths, and linen. There are alſo houſes here for the dying of ſilk, as likewiſe, for the making of tapeſtry and linen, and the printing of cotton. Leather and Pruſſian blue, &c. are prepared here, and the orphan-houſe is appropriated to the culture of ſilk. In Leipſig are computed about 20 bookſellers, 50 French and Italian mercantile and trading people, 150 wholeſale dealers, above 250 retailers, and many dealers in cloth. The town itſelf, in all probability, received its original from the Sorbenwends. Dithmar, in his chronicle, ſpeaks of it ſo early as the year 1015, under the title of a town. According to the received opinion, it belonged to the biſhopric of Merſeburg, till Conrad, marggrave of Meiſſen, obtained the poſſeſſion of it in the year 1134, by exchange. In 1519, a theological conference was held here between Dr. Luther and Dr. Eck, and, in 1631, another appointed between the Saxon or Lutheran, and the Brandenburg and Heſſian, or Calviniſt divines. In 1547, this town was beſieged, in vain, by the elector, John Frederick; as alſo, in 1637, by Bannier, the Swediſh general. In 1631 and 1632, it was taken by the Imperialiſts, and, in 1642, by the Swedes. In 1745 and 1756, it was garriſoned by the Pruſſians, to whom it was obliged to pay very conſiderable ſums of money, by way of contribution. The circle contains 33 towns, and upwards of 1000 villages: 56 miles WNW. Dreſden. Long. 30. 4. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 16. N.

LEISEBACH, a river of Sileſia, which runs into the Oder, 1 mile W. Stœdtl Leubus, in the principality of Lignitz.

LEISELSHEIM, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, and palatinate of the Rhine: 3 miles WNW. Worms.

* LEISZNIG, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and circle of Leipzig, on the Mulda, with manufactures of cloth, lace, ſtockings, &c. It has two churches: 24 miles ESE. Leipzig, and 32 NW. Dreſden. Long. 30. 39. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 7. N.

LEISTENAU, a town of Pruſſia, in the province of Oberland: 6 miles W. Biſchofswerder.

LEITA, or Leyta, or Leytha, a river of Germany, which riſes in the ſouth-weſt part of the archduchy of Auſtria, and joins the Raab, at Raab, in Hungary; after which, the united ſtream runs into a branch of the Danube, 9 miles W. from Comorn.

LEITH, a town of Scotland, in the county of Edinburgh. Leith is the ſeaport of Edinburgh; large and populous, and ſtands on both ſides of the harbour, which divides it into North and South Leith. The harbour is formed by a noble ſtone pier, which was built in the beginning of the preſent century, at the mouth of the little river called The Water of Leith. This harbour is now greatly improved, and accommodated with an elegant draw-bridge, and a good quay. The road of Leith affords good anchoring ground for ſhips of the greateſt ſize. In 1781, a fleet of above 500 ſail of merchant ſhips, under convoy of ſeveral ſhips of the line, remained here for ſome weeks. The commerce of this place is very conſiderable, and the veſſels, employed in the London trade, are in general of a large ſize, and well-conſtructed. The largeſt ſhips at this port, however, are thoſe employed in the Greenland whale-fiſhery. The port of Leith is conveniently ſituated for the navigation of the Eaſtern Seas. To Germany, Holland, and the Baltic, are exported lead, glaſs-ware, linen and woollen ſtuffs, and a variety of other goods. From thence are imported timber, oak-bark, hides, linen-rags, pearl-aſhes, flax, hemp, tar, and many other articles. From France, Spain, and Portugal, wines, brandy, oranges and lemons. From the Weſt Indies, and America, rice, indigo, rum, ſugar and logwood. Ships of conſiderable ſize are built at this port, and ſeveral extenſive rope works are here carried on. Three glaſs houſes have been long employed for manufacturing of bottle-glaſs, window-glaſs, and cryſtal, and three others have been lately erected. A great carpet manufacture, a ſoap-work, and ſome iron forges, are alſo worthy of mention. The number of inhabitants in Leith is reckoned to be about twelve thouſand. There are three places of public worſhip, belonging to the eſtabliſhed religion. The citadel in North Leith was fortified in the time of Oliver Cromwell; but theſe works were demoliſhed at the reſtoration of Charles II. A little to the ſouth-weſt of the citadel ſtands a ſmall fortification, or battery, which commands the entrance of the harbour: 2 miles N. Edinburgh.

LEITH WATER, a river of Scotland, which runs into the Forth, at Leith.

LEITMERITZ, a town of Bohemia, in a circle of the ſame name, ſituated on the Elbe, well built and populous; the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Prague. The circle is ſo fertile and fine a country, as to have been called the Bohemian Paradiſe; excluſive of which, it is ſupplied, by means of the river Elbe, with the products of the reſt of the provinces of the kingdom, and alſo of other countries. The wines called Podſkalſky, which grow near Auſti, is particularly famous, and the warm mineral waters of Topolitz are very wholſome. We alſo find here tin and precious ſtones. In this circle are reckoned 89 ſeigniories, eſtates, and ſeats: 28 miles NNW. Prague, and 34 SSE. Dreſden. Long. 31. 48. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 25. N.

LEITRIM, a county of Ireland, in the province of Connaught, bounded on the north by the bay of Donegal, on the north-eaſt by Fermanagh, on the ſouth-eaſt by Cavan and Longford, and on the ſouth-weſt by Roſcommon and Sligo; about 42 miles in length, from north-weſt to ſouth-eaſt, and from 6 to 16 broad. The northern parts are mountainous, but furniſh food for a great number of young cattle; the ſouthern parts are level, and the ſoil fertile. The linen manufacture increaſes population, and the lands are in general well cultivated. Some conſiderable iron-works have lately been eſtabliſhed at Arigna. This country abounds with lakes and ſmall rivers. Carrick is the county town. Six members are returned to parliament, viz. for the county, for Carrick, and Jamestown, two each.

LEITRIM, a town of Ireland, from which the county is named, ſituated on the Shannon: 3 miles N. Carrick.

LEMBERG, or Leopold, a town of Poland, formerly the capital of a palatinate of the ſame name, now the capital of Galicia, and united to Auſtria. It is a large and opulent city, and pretty well fortified in the Poliſh manner, that is, only with timber; and lies low, on the banks of the river Peltew, which ſoon after joins the Bug, being ſurrounded with hills and mountains which command the town. Lemberg is the ſee of a Popiſh archbiſhop, and likewiſe of a Ruſſian and Armenian biſhop. It carries on a conſiderable trade, and has two caſtles, one within, and another without its walls. The latter ſtands on a high hill, and the Carmelite monaſtery, which is fortified, may ſerve for a citadel to this caſtle. Here is a magnificent cathedral, ſeveral other churches, and a gymnaſium, or ſeminary, an arſenal, a public granary, two Jewiſh ſchools, &c. A provincial diet and court judicature alſo are held in this town. The inhabitants of this city are a mixture of ſeveral nations; but no Proteſtants were tolerated amongſt them. Lemberg was erected into an archbiſhop's ſee in 1361, or 1362. In the year 1375, the ſee was removed to Halicz, but in 1416, it was reſtored to this city. In the year 1656, Lemberg held out two months, when beſieged by the Ruſſians and Coſaks; and in 1672, it alſo baffled the attempts of the Turks, who at laſt purchaſed it for 80,000 dollars. But in 1704, it was taken, ſword in hand, by Charles XII. king of Sweden: 72 miles SSE. Chelm, 156 E. Cracow, and 300 SSE. Konigſberg. Long. 24. 25. E. Greenwich. Lat. 50. 4. N.

LEWARDEN, a city of the United Dutch States, and capital of Frieſland, ſituated in the quarter called Ooſtergoo, it was only a ſmall town in the year 1190, when it was firſt ſurrounded with a wall. It is now large, rich, and populous, and fortified with good ramparts, defended by a large ditch full of water, ſeveral baſtions and other works : all the ſtreets are ſtraight, large, and handſome, and divided by many canals which interſect each other, and communicate with all parts of the province and the ſea, by means of which the inhabitants carry on conſiderable trade with Holland, Bremen, Embden, Hamburg, &c. The townhouſe is a handſome building, erected in the year 1715. The magiſtracy conſiſts of twelve perſons, viz. three burgomaſters and nine echevins. In the year 1559, pope Paul IV. erected it into a biſhopric, ſubject to the archbiſhop of Utrecht. The ſovereign council of the province of Frieſland reſides at this city, being transferred from Francker, in the year 1504 ; it conſiſts of twelve counſellors and a preſident, who are ſovereign judges of all cauſes, without appeal : 28 miles W. Groningen. Long. 23. 9. E. Ferro. Lat. 53. 12. N.

LEWES, a town of England, in the county of Suſſex, on the river Ouſe, which runs into the ſea, ſix miles below at Newhaven. It formerly contained twelve pariſh churches, which are now reduced to ſix. There are conſiderable remains of an ancient caſtle, which commanded a large extent of country. It was formerly ſurrounded with walls, veſtiges of which are yet viſible. Here was formerly a celebrated monaſtery, founded in the year 1078. It is a handſome town, and one of the largeſt and moſt populous in the county : and a borough by preſcription, but not incorporated, being governed by two conſtables, annually choſen at the court Leet. It ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament, and has a weekly market on Saturday. In the year 1264, a battle was fought here, between king Henry III. accompanied by his ſon ; and the barons, under the command of the earl of Leiceſter ; in which the former were defeated with great loſs, and the king himſelf taken priſoner : 45 miles E. Chicheſter, and 51 S. London.

LEWIS, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Delaware : 28 miles SSE. Dover. Long. 75. 17. W. Greenwich. Lat. 38. 46. N.

LEWIS, an iſland or rather peninſula, among the weſtern iſlands of Scotland, forming, with Harris, a large iſland, near 60 miles in length. Lewis, which is the northern part, is 40 miles in length from north-eaſt to ſouth-weſt, and about 13 in its mean breadth. It is on every part of its coaſt greatly indented with bays or lochs. The country is in general wild, bleak, barren of wood, and little fitted for cultivation ; the hills are covered with heath, which affords ſhelter for various ſorts of game. The lakes and ſtreams abound with ſalmon, large red trout, and other fiſhes. The land animals here, are ſimilar to thoſe found in the northern iſles, and the fiſhings on the coaſt are not inferior. The only town in Lewis, is Stornaway, ſituated on the eaſt ſide of the north diviſion of the iſland. To the weſt of Lewis and Harris, the coaſt is annually viſited by myriads of herrings. So immenſe are the ſhoals of dog-fiſh, that purſue the herrings, that their dorſal fins are ſometimes ſeen, like a thick buſh of ſedges above water, as far as the eye can reach. From the liver of the dog-fiſh, a conſiderable quantity of oil is extracted. In the ſeaſon, theſe ſhores are the reſort of many fiſhing veſſels from different parts. Many of the inhabitants here, as well as in the northern iſles, live chiefly by fiſhing, and a pitiful kind of agriculture. The Gaelic prevails among the lower kind of people ; but in the ſchools the Engliſh language is principally taught. Long. 2. 45. to 3. 23. W. Edinburgh. Lat. 58. to 58. 32. N.

LEXINGTON, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Maſſachuſetts, celebrated for being the firſt place where hoſtilities commenced, between the Britiſh troops and the Americans : 12 miles NW. Boſton.

LEYDEN, a city of Holland, ſuppoſed to be the ſame which Ptolemy calls Lugdunum Batavorum, and Antoninus, in his Itinerary, Caput Germanorum ; it holds a fourth rank among the ſix capital cities of Holland, and is the capital of a ſmall diſtrict, called Rhynland, which comprehends 49 towns or villages ; the ſtreets are exceedingly neat, wide, and long, divided by many handſome canals ; and it is, without doubt, one of the handſomeſt and largeſt cities of Holland, next to Amſterdam, and one of the moſt agreeable in Europe. It is ſituated on the ancient bed of the Rhine, which paſſes through the city, and divides it into about fifty iſlands, which have an eaſy communication with each other, by means of a great number of bridges, computed at 145, of which more than 100 are built of free-ſtone ; the different ſtreams of the Rhine unite again, at leaving the city at the white gate. The city was conſiderably enlarged towards the ſouth in the year 1389. In 1419 it was beſieged and taken, by Albert, comte of Bavaria, for having taken part with Florent de Wevelinchoven, biſhop of Utrecht. In the year 1574, the Spaniards, after they had taken Harlem, and been obliged to raiſe the ſiege of Alcmaer, attempted to lay ſiege to Leyden ; but the comte Louis, of Naſſau, brother of the prince of Orange, advancing with ſome troops, the Spaniards not thinking themſelves at that time in ſufficient force, abandoned their enterpriſe. Some time after, having obtained a reinforcement, they returned to the ſiege, under the command of Francis Baldez ; this general having ſeized the outworks, and not thinking himſelf able to force the city, reſolved to turn the ſiege into a blockade, and to ſtarve them to a ſurrender. It is hardly credible what the inhabitants endured : they indeed, ſignalized their conſtancy on this occaſion, during a ſiege of five months, when neither famine nor peſtilence were able to deſtroy their courage. The women lined the ramparts, and performed all the duties of a ſoldier, animated by the example of one, whoſe name was Kennava, a woman of undaunted ſpirit ; ſhe attended, with her companions, all the ſallies made on the enemy. The miſery became ſo great, that above 6000 perſons died, and there remained no more than 107 muids of wheat for 14,000 inhabitants, who yet remained alive. Of this the Spaniſh general being apprized, ſummoned them to ſurrender, but, they told him, they could not want the means of exiſtence ſo long as their left arms remained ; thoſe they were determined to feed on, and reſerve their right to defend their liberty. Adrian de Werf, burgomaſter of the city, ſhowed at this criſis admirable conſtancy and courage : being ſolicited by ſome of the inhabitants to ſurrender, he ſaid, " My friends, ſince I muſt die, it is of little importance whether I fall by you or by the enemy ; cut me to pieces, and divide them amongſt you : I ſhall die ſatisfied, if in my death I can be the leaſt uſeful." During the ſiege, they made uſe of paper money, with the inſcriptions, " HÆC LIBERTATIS ERGO," and " PUGNO PRO PATRIA." Towards the month of October, juſt as they were on the point of ſurrendering, they underſtood, by means of ſome pigeons, that relief was at hand : accordingly, on the third of October, the dykes of the Meuſe and Iſſel having been opened, Louis Boiſſot, admiral of Zealand, advanced with a number of troops in flat-bottomed boats to their aſſiſtance. The Spaniards ſeeing the ſudden inundation, were fearful of being deſtroyed immediately, and abandoned the ſiege, with all the works they had conſtructed for the blockade. In memory of this remarkable event, the inhabitants repreſent a ſpectacle of the ſiege every ſeven years. William, prince of Orange, who was hardly recovered of an illneſs, ordered himſelf to be conveyed to Leyden, that he might in perſon thank the citizens for their brave defence ; he liberally rewarded the admiral Boiſſot, and Janus Douza, the lord of Noortwyck, who commanded in the city ; and did not forget the officers and ſoldiers. He granted ſeveral privileges to the city, and founded the famous univerſity, the firſt in the whole country ; and Janus Douza was appointed the firſt curator, an employment worthy of his merit, his capacity, and his erudition. In the year 1655, Leyden was viſited by the plague, which carried off near 4000 of the inhabitants ; but by the great care of the magiſtrates it was prevented from ſpreading farther into the province. The cloth manufactured at Leyden, is much celebrated, and there is a ſtaple hall built for the uſe of manufacturers and merchants. The town-houſe is a good ſtructure, with a handſome ſtone front ; in the burgomaſter's chamber, is a very capital painting of the laſt judgment, by Luke of Leyden, for which it is ſaid the emperor Rodolphus offered as many gold ducats as would cover it : there are many other capital paintings, and the celebrated ſiege of 1574 wrought in tapeſtry. Beſides theſe, are the prince's hotel, which was formerly a convent, the houſe for orphans, &c. but the principal building is the great church, one of the handſomeſt in Holland. The common council of the city, called Vroedſchap, is compoſed of forty perſons, who ought to be natives of the province, and at leaſt twenty-eight years of age, and Proteſtants. Four burgomaſters are elected by this council, three of whom are changed every year on the feaſt of St. Martin, one, elected the preceding year, always remaining. They alſo name ſixteen perſons from whom eight are choſen on the 25th of July yearly, as echevins for the ſtates of the province. Three others likewiſe, are nominated by them to the ſtates of the province, which elect one to be grand baily of Leyden, who adminiſters juſtice, in civil and criminal matters jointly with the echevins. In this city was born the famous John of Leyden, otherwiſe Bucold, a taylor and chief of the Anabaptiſts. Boats are going from Leyden to Amſterdam, Harlem, Utrecht, Delft, the Hague, &c. and returning daily. Leyden has eight gates ; one part of the ramparts is of earth covered with turf, but the other part is faced with brick, and has ſeveral baſtions. The land about Leyden is exceedingly rich, and much cultivated by gardeners, who ſend the produce even to Amſterdam : from the rich meadows and paſtures, they make excellent butter and cheeſe, equal to any part of the province. Some prove the antiquity of Leyden, from an ancient round tower called the Burght, about 600 feet in circumference, ſaid to have been built by the Romans or Saxons : while Joſeph Scaliger, on the other hand, pretends it was built only five or ſix centuries ago, by the comtes of Holland : 14 miles N. Rotterdam, and 19 SW. Amſterdam. Long. 21. 55. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 9. N.

It has Meſopotamia to the eaſt, Armenia to the north, Paleſtine to the ſouth, and the Mediterranean to the weſt. It is compoſed of four incloſures of mountains, which riſe one upon the other. The firſt is very fruitful in grain and fruits ; the ſecond is very barren abounding in nothing but thorns, rocks, and flints ; the third, though higher than this, enjoys a perpetual ſpring, the trees being always green there, and the orchards filled with fruit : in a word, it is ſo agreeable and fertile, that ſome have called it a Terreſtrial Paradiſe. The fourth is ſo high, that it is almoſt always covered with ſnow, ſo as to be uninhabitable by reaſon of the great cold.

LIBAU, a ſea-port of the duchy of Courland, ſituated on the Baltic. It was built by the Lettonians ; and is ſaid to derive its name from the Lettonian word Leepaja, i. e. a piece, of ground planted with linden trees ; for a great number of thoſe trees formerly grew here : and, to this day, the Lettonions call the town Leepaja. So early as the thirteenth century, there were ſome Germans among the inhabitants of this town ; and at the cloſe of the fifteenth, and the beginning of the ſixteenth century, it greatly flouriſhed, when a great number of Germans reſorted hither, and it obtained the privileges of a city in 1625. As the harbour has not a ſufficient depth of water for ſhips of burden, they are unloaded in the road ; but duke Erneſt John, in 1737, cauſed it to be cleared, and the future accumulation of mud and ſand to be prevented by a water-work, which has rendered it very commodious for light veſſels. Above 150 ſhips uſually arrive in this port in a twelve-month, to load with hemp, lin-ſeed, &c. This town was often taken by the Swedes, but finally ceded to Courland, by the peace of 1660 : 66 miles W. Mittau. Long. 21. 37. E. Greenwich. Lat. 55. 28. N.

LIEGE, a biſhopric and electorate of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, bounded on the north by Brabant, on the eaſt by Limburg, Juliers, and Luxemburg, on the ſouth by Luxemburg and the French department of the Ardennes, and on the weſt by Brabant, Namur, and Hainaut; about eighty miles in length from north to ſouth, its breadth is very irregular. The ſoil here is fertile in corn and paſturage, and yields wine, which reſembles the middling wines of Burgundy and Champagne, together with very conſiderable foreſts, and mine-works of copper, lead, iron, and coal, as alſo many good ſtone-quarries, and among them, likewiſe, ſome of marble. This biſhopric is alſo celebrated for its mineral waters; as namely, thoſe at Spa and Chaud-fontaine. The principal rivers by which it is watered are the Meuſe and Sambre, which unite in the county of Namur. The principal exports of this country, and in particular of the town of Liege, conſiſt of beer, arms, nails, ſerge, leather, and coal; all which are exported from hence in prodigious large quantities. This biſhopric contains in it twenty-ſix towns, which are divided into the Wallon and Flemiſh. The biſhopric of Liege was at firſt founded in the town of Tongern, and Servatius was the firſt biſhop that can be aſcertained. This prelate quitted Tongern, and went to Maeſtricht, in which alſo was the ſee of his ſucceſſors in the biſhopric, till St. Hubert betook himſelf, in the beginning of the eighth century, to Liege, where alſo all his ſucceſſors took up their place of reſidence, though the biſhops were ſtill for a long time after ſtyled biſhops of Tongern; and Heraclius, or Eberhard, was the firſt who aſſumed the title of biſhop of Liege. In the council of the princes of the empire, Liege takes rank alternately with Munſter, but ſo that Oſnabruck always ſits between them. The evaluation of the empire for this biſhopric is 50 horſe, and 170 foot, or monthly 1280 florins; but it has complained of this high evaluation, and it was reduced to 826 florins. To the chamber court it is rated in the uſual matricula, at 360 rixdollars 62½ kruitzers for each term; and with reſpect alſo to this evaluation, one third is abated.

LIEGE, a city of Germany, and capital of the biſhopric, in the circle of Weſtphalia, it is a large, populous, and rich city, ſituated on the Meuſe, in a valley ſurrounded by hills, with agreeable and fertile meadows between, watered by the rivers Looſe, Ourte, and Ambleve, which empty themſelves into the Meuſe as it enters this city. The empire has always made this city ſubject to the circle of Weſtphalia, although the eſtates of the country aſſert the prerogatives of other ſovereign ſtates of Germany, as a particular member of the empire; but by a decree of Charles VI. it was united, in the year 1716, with its dependencies, to the circle of Weſtphalia. It is called the hell of women, the purgatory of men, and the paradiſe of prieſts. It was firſt encompaſſed with walls by St. Hubert, in the beginning of the eighth century. The city ſuffered much in the ninth century from the incurſions of the Normans. Henry, duke of Brabant, took it in the year 1212, and pillaged it ſix days. In the 17th century it ſuffered ſeverely on account of the elections of the biſhops. John of Bavaria governed it a long time, although he was not a prieſt; and as he treated the citizens ill, they drove him from the palace, and beſieged him in Maeſtricht: but his brother-in-law, John, duke of Burgundy, and comte of Flanders, coming to his aſſiſtance, a battle was fought in the year 1409, in which 6000 of the Liegeois were killed, and the reſt compelled to ſubmit. Some of the moſt culpable were tied two together and thrown into the Meuſe. Not long after, Charles the Bold, duke of Burgundy, taking part with Louis of Burgundy, the biſhop, againſt whom the inhabitants had riſen, came to beſiege the city, with ſuccours from France, and took it by aſſault, the 30th of October, 1468; he then ſet it on fire and ſacked it, without ſparing even the churches. In the beginning of the ſeventeenth century, a diſpute relative to the election of the burgomaſters occaſioned great troubles. Anciently, twenty-two judges, who formed a celebrated tribunal at Liege, had a cuſtom of appointing thirty perſons to elect the new burgomaſters. In the year 1603, the biſhop, Erneſt of Bavaria, transferred this right to the citizens, who were divided into ſixteen chambers; but as that gave riſe to many great diſorders, prince Ferdinand, who ſucceeded Erneſt, ſupported by the emperor, changed the right again in favour of the twenty-two. In 1629, the populace roſe, and elected the new burgomaſters, contrary to the direction of the prince, whence came the diviſion of parties, the Chiroux and the Grignoux, the firſt was of the ancient patrician families, for the moſt part men of letters; the other took the part of the populace, and was the more numerous. On the repreſentation of the prince, the emperor ſent general John de Weert, in the year 1636, to take his winter-quarters in the environs of Liege; and deputed the comte of Naſſau Hadamar, while the Marquis of Lede was ſent on the part of the king of Spain, to bring back the citizens to their duty. In the year 1636, the troubles increaſed; the comte de Warfuſé, who had been chief of the finances to the king of Spain at Broſſels, had been accuſed of mal-practices, and condemned by the grand council at Malines, and was hung in effigy; but eſcaping to Liege, he formed a black conſpiracy, thinking by that means to obtain the favour of the king. On the 16th of April, he invited Sebaſtian de Ruelle, burgomaſter of Liege, to dine with him; during the repaſt, a troop of ſoldiers entered, and drawing the burgomaſter aſide, they killed him on the ſpot, under pretence that he was engaged in the intereſt of France. This horrid murder did not long remain unpuniſhed, for the populace hearing of it, flew to the houſe, dragged the comte along the ſtreets, and hung him up by the feet to a poſt, they then cut off his head and arms, which they expoſed at the gates of Liege, burned his body, and threw the aſhes into the Meuſe; they likewiſe put to death his ſervants, and the ſoldiers who had been the agents of this treachery; they then took the echevin Theodore Fleron, whom they ſuſpected as the accomplice of Warfuſé, and without any trial, hung him, in the grand market. The body of Ruelle was interred with great magnificence, and the burgomaſters were afterwards accompanied by a body-guard of thirty men, when they appeared in public. In 1648, the prince biſhop Ferdinand returned to Viſet with ſome troops, with a deſign to come to Liege, and put a ſtop to the diſturbances and ſeditious factions between the Chiroux and the Grignoux; but the citizens refuſed him entrance, on the 10th of April, and the burgomaſter Hennet ordered the cannon to be placed againſt his troops. The prince on this retired to Huy, to wait for ſuccours from the emperor, who ſent ſome Weſtphalian ſoldiers, under the command of general Sparr, to whom the citizens opened their gates, on the 28th of Auguſt, and the prince returned to Liege, on the 16th of October following. Hennet and Roland, a former burgomaſter, who had been principally concerned in the troubles, were beheaded, and their heads expoſed on the gates of the city. The prince then changed the mode of electing the burgomaſters to the following: the ſixteen chambers of the city, who repreſent the citizens at large, and are each compoſed of thirty-ſix perſons, noblemen, lawyers, men of letters, merchants, and artizans, each elect by ballot two perſons; a ſecond ballot then takes place, and the firſt drawn is an elector, the other, one of the council; when theſe ſixteen electors are thus found, they chooſe, by a majority of voices, three perſons, from whom one is choſen burgomaſter by another ballot. Another burgomaſter is balloted for from three perſons named by the prince. There is a grand mayor, and two ſubordinate mayors. Beſides the court of echevins, and the ordinary magiſtracy, there is an official belonging to the biſhop, who judges in the firſt inſtance all eccleſiaſtical cauſes. In the year 1650, prince Maximilian, who ſucceeded his uncle Ferdinand, built a regular citadel on the mount of Ste. Walburg, which has two communications with the city, one of which is by 600 ſteps. On this occaſion the citizens teſtified their diſcontent, in affixing to it the name of Aceldama, or Field of Blood, in alluſion to the death of their burgomaſters. In 1658, ſome mal-contents entered into a conſpiracy to ſurpriſe the citadel, and ſet the city on fire; but the plot was diſcovered, and the principal authors put to death. In the war with France againſt the empire, Spain, and Holland, the government of the citadel was entruſted to the baron de Vierſet, who, on the 28th of March, 1675, admitted a detachment of 1500 men from the French garriſon at Maeſtricht, but they abandoned it, after deſtroying the works, in March following. The inhabitants, no longer kept in awe by the citadel, again rebelled, and elected their burgomaſters as they had done before; but the biſhop receiving ſome troops from France, under the command of the comte de Choiſeul, the citizens opened the gates on the 25th of July, 1684, without coming to extremities: the two burgomaſters were beheaded, but the reſt of the citizens pardoned, and a ſtrong garriſon placed in it under the marquis de la Salle. A ſhort time after, the citadel was repaired, and its fortifications increaſed; but the new works were deſtroyed about eight years after. In the year 1691, prince Jean Louis d'Elderen was the firſt to declare war againſt France, being ſupported by the emperor, the empire, Spain, England, Holland, &c. Louis XIV. ſent the marquis de Boufflers to Liege, who bombarded it, and did conſiderable damage. At the death of Charles II. king of Spain, the prince Joſeph Clement of Bavaria, in the year 1701, declared for his nephew, Philip V. and the comte de Berlo, governor of the citadel, received the French troops. On the 14th of October, 1702, the allies, under the command of the duke of Marlborough, made themſelves maſters of the city, and of the citadel on the 23d. In 1705, the French, after taking Huy, marched towards Liege, with an intent to attack the citadel; but being informed that the duke was marching to its aſſiſtance, they abandoned their enterprize. The Dutch kept a garriſon of troops in the citadel till the year 1718, at their own expence, in virtue of an article in the peace of Aix la Chapelle, concluded four years before, and then quitted it to the ſoldiers of the biſhop of Liege, after deſtroying all the out-works. Liege is divided into three parts, the city, the iſland, and the outer Meuſe; it has ten grand fauxbourgs, and two ſmaller, ſixteen gates, ſeventeen bridges, and 154 ſtreets; there are two very fine quays, planted with rows of trees. Beſides the cathedral, it has within the city and fauxbourgs ſeven collegiate, and thirty pariſh churches, and forty-ſix religious houſes. The cathedral of St. Lambert is a vaſt ſtructure, built by St. Hubert, in the year 712, on the very ſpot in which hi predeceſſor St. Lambert, biſhop of Maeſtricht, had ſuffered martyrdom. I was firſt conſecrated to St. Coſme and St. Damien, but the body of S

Lambe

Lambert being removed thither, it changed its name to that of St. Lambert. St. Hubert founded twenty prebends; St. Floribert, his ſon and ſucceſſor, afterwards founded ten more; ſince which time their number has been augmented to ſixty, and their revenues in proportion. Theſe canons, or prebendaries, are moſt of them of noble extraction: at one time they counted ſeven ſons of kings, thirty ſons of dukes, and twenty-two ſons of comtes. The treaſury of this church is very conſiderable, both in relics and in other riches, particularly an equeſtrian ſtatue of St. George, in gold, preſented by the duke of Burgundy, as a mark of his penitence, for having pillaged the city in 1468. The biſhop is elected by the canons, and is an abſolute prince, one of the moſt conſiderable eccleſiaſtical princes of Germany, having in his dioceſe fifty-two baronies, eighteen cities, or walled towns, and 400 villages, with a revenue of 300,000 ducats a year, and is able to keep an army of 8000 ſoldiers, without oppreſſing his ſubjects. Dumourier, at the head of his French troops, made himſelf maſter of Liege the 22d day of November, 1792: in March following, the French were compelled to retire, and driven out of Liege and Brabant. In the year 1794, the French troops again entered Liege, after a ſhort reſiſtance. Long. 23. 2. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 40. N.—This city and biſhopric, are now annexed to the republic of France, and were ſo proclaimed, by ſound of trumpet, in the month of January, 1793.

LIEGNITZ, or Lignitz, a town of Sileſia, and capital of a principality of the ſame name, and one of the beſt towns in Sileſia, ſituated on the Katzbach. The old palace of the princes, though within the town, is ſurrounded with a diſtinct moat and high wall. This palace, ſince the fire in 1711, by which it was nearly deſtroyed, has been repaired. The ſtates of the province aſſemble here in a very ſtately ſtone edifice. The Lutherans have two churches. The Papiſts are in poſſeſſion of the collegiate church of St. John, which, in 1698, was taken from the Lutherans, and being given to the Jeſuits, was entirely rebuilt; and the ſuperb burial chapel of the dukes of Lignitz and Brieg, of the Breſlau line, added to it. Beſides theſe, they have a college of ſuitable magnificence, with other religious Popiſh foundations. Here is alſo a ſpacious academy, founded by the emperor Joſeph, for the inſtruction of young gentlemen, of both religions, in military exerciſes. Lignitz carries on a conſiderable trade in cloth and madder, and is alſo one of the moſt ancient towns in all Sileſia. In the year 1241, after the unfortunate battle with the Tartars, the inhabitants themſelves ſet the town on fire, and quitted it; but againſt the caſtle the Tartars vented their rage in vain. In 1338, 1411, 1438, 1495, 1532, 1558, 1609, 1639, 1648, and 1672, it was either wholly deſtroyed by fires, or ſuffered variouſly by them. In 1741, the Pruſſians took it, without oppoſition. In the year 1757, while in the hands of the Auſtrians, its works were augmented, notwithſtanding which, towards the end of the ſame year, it capitulated to the Pruſſians: 16 miles W. Neumarck, and 32 W. Breſlaw.

LIEOU-KIEOU, iſlands in the Eaſtern Indian Sea, ſituated between Corea, Formoſa, and Japan, in number thirty-ſix. The principal and largeſt is called Lieou-kieou; the reſt have each a particular name. The large iſland extends from north to ſouth about 130 miles, and 36 to 40 from eaſt to weſt: but on the ſouth ſide the extent from eaſt to weſt is not 30. The ſouth-eaſt part of the iſland, where the court reſides, is called Cheouli, and it is there that Kin-tching, the capital city, is ſituated. The king's palace, which is reckoned to be four leagues in circumference, is built on a neighbouring mountain. It has four gates, which correſpond to the four cardinal points; and that which fronts the weſt, forms the grand entry. If we believe theſe iſlanders, the origin of their empire is loſt in the remoteſt antiquity. It is, however, certain, that the exiſtence of the country, called Lieou-kieou, was not known in China before the year 605 of the Chriſtian æra. It was only in 1372, under the reign of Hong-vou, founder of the dynaſty of Ming, that theſe iſlands ſubmitted voluntarily to the Chineſe government. The iſles of Lieou-kieou had neither iron nor porcelain, Hong-vou ſupplied this want; he cauſed a great number of utenſils of iron and inſtruments to be made, which he ſent thither, together with a quantity of porcelain veſſels. Commerce, navigation, and the arts, ſoon began to flouriſh. Theſe iſlanders learned to caſt bells for their temples, to manufacture paper and the fineſt ſtuffs, and to make porcelain, with which they had been ſupplied before from Japan. The celebrated revolution, which placed the Tartars on the imperial throne of China, produced no change in the conduct of the kings of Lieou-kieou. Chang-tché, who was then reigning, ſent ambaſſadors to acknowledge Chun-tchi, and received a ſeal from him, on which were engraven ſome Tartar characters. It was then ſettled, that the king of Lieou-kieou ſhould pay his tribute only every two years. He ordered that the king of Lieou-kieou ſhould never ſend in tribute roſe-wood, cloves, or any other production which was not really of the growth of the country; but that he ſhould ſend a fixed quantity of ſulphur, copper, tin, ſhells, and mother of pearl, which is remarkably beautiful in theſe iſlands. The veſſels that are built in this country are greatly valued by the people of China, and Japan. In theſe the natives go not only from one iſland to another, but alſo to China, Tong-king, Cochin-china, Corea, Nanga-za-ki, Satſuma, the neighbouring iſles, and to Formoſa, where they diſpoſe of their different commodities. Beſides thoſe articles of commerce, which their manufactories of ſilk, cotton, paper, arms, copper utenſils, &c. furniſh them, they alſo export mother of pearl, tortoiſe, and other ſhells, coral and whet-ſtones, which are in great requeſt both in China and Japan. Their edifices, temples, and the palace of their kings, are built after the Japaneſe manner; but the houſes of the Chineſe, the hotel of their ambaſſador, their imperial college, and the temple of the goddeſs Tien-fey, are built after the Chineſe. The natives of Lieou-kieou, are, in general, mild, affable, and temperate, they are active and laborious, enemies to ſlavery, and deteſt falſehood and diſhoneſty. Excepting the grandees, bonzes, and Chineſe eſtabliſhed at Lieou-kieou, few of the inhabitants of theſe iſlands can either read or write. The capital is in Long. 146. 26. E. Ferro. Lat. 26. 2. LI-KIANG-TOU, a city of China, of the firſt rank, in the province of Yun-nan, near the ſource of the river Yang Cong-kiang. It is ſaid that the inhabitants of this city and its territory, are deſcended from ſome ancient colonies of Chineſe, which came and fixed there ; it has no other city within its diſtrict, but is ſurrounded by mountains, which ſeparate it from the land of the Lamas. It is not doubted but that there are mines of gold within its mountains. The whole country is very well watered, and the land fruitful ; there are found here amber and pine-apples : 1150 miles SW. Peking. Long. 117. 50. E. Ferro. Lat. 26. 52. N.

LILIENSTEIN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and marggraviate of Meiſſen : 1 mile NE. Konigſtein.

LILIENTHAL, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and duchy of Bremen, ſituated on the Worp river : 10 miles NNE. Bremen, and 20 NNW. Verden.

LI-LIN, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Houquang : 40 miles SE. Tchang-cha.

LILLE, a city of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the North, before the revolution, the capital of French Flanders, ſituated in a rich and marſhy ſoil, ſurrounded with walls, and ſtrongly fortified by monſieur Vauban. The river Deule croſſes it. They reckon 170 ſtreets, many of which are handſome, 30 public places, 8000 houſes, and 56,000 inhabitants. Before the revolution, it contained 18 convents, a penitentiary houſe for women of bad life, 6 hoſpitals, 3 colleges, &c. &c. It was divided into ſeven pariſhes, and had ſeven gates, ſome of which are admired for their architecture. Here are manufactures of cloth, camlets, ratteens, ſtuffs of ſilk and woollen, cotton, linen of all qualities and deſigns, lace, ribbons, carpets, hats, ſtockings, paper, ſoap, &c. This town owes its origin to a caſtle, named Le Buc, which was the reſidence of the ancient foreſters, or counts of Flanders, and was firſt built in the year 640. In the year 1007, it was enlarged by Baldwin IV. and was ſurrounded with walls by his ſon and ſucceſſor, Baldwin V. called Baldwin de Lille, who made it his reſidence. In the year 1577, in the diſputes between the Netherlands and the king of Spain, the malcontents demoliſhed the caſtle, which had been fortified ; but two years after, they ſubmitted to the king of Spain. In the year 1581, the Ghent rebels attempted to ſurpriſe it, but they were obliged to retire with great loſs, and ſome citizens who favoured them were put to death. In the year 1645, the French beſieged this place, but were compelled to raiſe the ſiege. In the year 1667, Louis XIV. came in perſon to beſiege it, during the minority of Charles II. king of Spain, in the time of peace. The town was commanded by the count de Brouay, ſon of the marquis of Spinola, with about 1000 men, and being unprovided for a ſiege, he was compelled to ſurrender the place after nine days' attack. In the year 1708, it was taken by the allies, under the command of prince Eugene and the duke of Marlborough, after a ſiege of three months, with a loſs of ſeveral thouſand men, but was reſtored at the peace of Utrecht, in the year 1713. The citadel of Lille is conſidered as one of the beſt works of Vauban, and, except Turin, the ſtrongeſt in Europe. In the year 1792, Lille was ſummoned by the Auſtrians, under the command of the duke of Saxe-Teſchen, and on the refuſal of the citizens to ſurrender it, was bombarded, but without ſucceſs. The ſiege began on the 29th of September, and was raiſed on the 8th of October, during which time it is ſuppoſed that upwards of 30,000 red-hot balls, and 6000 bombs were thrown into the city, excluſive of the battering train. The damage done to the town was conſiderable, with the loſs of about 500 lives, chiefly women and children : 5¾ poſts N. Douay, and 27¾ N. Paris. Long. 20. 43. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 38. N.

LILLEBONNE, a town of France, in the department of the Lower Seine, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Caudebec : 5½ leagues E. Havre, and 2½ W. Caudebec.

LILLERS, a town of France, in the department of the Straits of Calais, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Bethune, ceded to France by Spain, at the peace of the Pyrennées. The fortifications are deſtroyed : 2 leagues WNW. Bethune.

LILLEISTEAF, a town of Scotland, in the county of Roxburg : 7 miles WNW. Jedburgh.

LILLIENFELD, a village, and rich convent of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria, on the Traſen : 14 miles S. St. Polten.

LILLIPUT, a town of United America, in the ſtate of North Carolina, on the river Fear : 2 miles N. Brunſwick.

LILLO, a town of Spain, in New Caſtile : 28 miles ESE. Toledo.

LILLO, a fortreſs of Brabant, on the eaſt ſide of the Scheldt, built by the Dutch in the year 1584, from which time it has always had a garriſon ; its fortifications are very regular, and its ramparts lined with many pieces of cannon, to prevent veſſels of too large a ſize going up to Antwerp, according to the treaty entered into at Munſter, in the year 1648, between Spain and Holland. It has ſeveral houſes in the fort, and different cabarets ; and the ſtates always keep a frigate in the Scheldt, to collect the duties payable by the veſſels which paſs. Lillo was attacked by the Spaniards, in the year 1588, under the command of the marquis de Riſbourg ; but the garriſon, under Odet, lord of Teligni, defended themſelves with ſo much valour, that the marquis was obliged to retire, with the loſs of 2000 men. It was taken by the French, in the year 1794 : 9 miles NW. Antwerp, and 12 S. Berg-op-Zoom.

LILMKILN BAY, a bay of the iſland of St. Chriſtopher, on the ſouth coaſt, about a mile W. from Baſſeterre.

LIMA, an audience of South America, in the viceroyalty of Peru, erected in the year 1542, containing one archbiſhopric, viz. Lima, and four biſhoprics, viz. Truxillo, Guamanga, Cuſco, and Arequipa. The archbiſhopric of Lima contains 15 juriſdictions. The dioceſe of Truxillo contains 7 ; Guamanga 9 ; Cuſco 14 ; and Arequipa 6.

LIMA, a city of South America, and capital of an audience, in the viceroyalty of Peru. This city, alſo called Civdad de los Reyes, or City of Kings, was founded, in the beginning of the year 1535, by Francis Pizarro. It is ſituated in the ſpacious and delightful valley of Rimac, an Indian word, and the true name of the city itſelf, from a corrupt pronunciation of which word the Spaniards have derived Lima. Rimac is the name by which both the valley and the river are ſtill called. This appellation is derived from an idol to which the native Indians uſed to offer ſacrifice, as did the Yncas, after they had extended their empire hither ; and, as it was ſuppoſed to return anſwer to the prayers addreſſed to it, they called it, by way of diſtinction, Rimac, or he who ſpeaks. Its ſituation is one of the moſt advantageous that can be imagined ; for, being in the centre of that ſpacious valley, it commands the whole, without any difficulty. Northward, though at a conſiderable diſtance, is the Cordillera, or chain of the Andes. The river, which is of the ſame name, waſhes the walls of Lima, and when not increaſed by the torrents from the mountains, is eaſily forded ; but at other times, beſides the increaſe of its breadth, its depth and rapidity render fording impoſſible ; and, accordingly, a very elegant and ſpacious ſtone bridge is built over it, having at one end a gate, the beautiful architecture of which is equal to the other parts of this uſeful ſtructure. This gate forms the entrance into the city, and leads to the grand ſquare, which is very large, and finely ornamented. The form of this city is triangular, the baſe, or longeſt ſide, extending along the banks of the river. Its length is 1920 toiſes, or exactly two-thirds of a league. Its greateſt breadth, from north to ſouth, that is, from the bridge to the angle oppoſite to the baſe, is 1080 toiſes, or two-fifths of a league. It is ſurrounded with a brick wall, which anſwers the original intention, but is without any manner of regularity. This work was begun and finiſhed by the duke de la Palata, in the year 1685. It is flanked with 34 baſtions, but without platforms or embraſure; the intention of it being merely to encloſe the city, and render it capable of ſuſtaining any ſudden attack of the Indians. It has, in its whole circumference, ſeven gates and three poſterns. On the ſide of the river, oppoſite to the city, is a ſuburb, called St. Lazaro. All the ſtreets of this ſuburb, like thoſe of the city, are broad, parallel, or at right angles, ſome running from north to ſouth, and others from eaſt to weſt, forming ſquares of houſes, each 150 yards in front. The ſtreets are paved, and along them run ſtreams of water, conducted from the river a little above the city; and, being arched over, contribute to its cleanlineſs, without the leaſt inconvenience. The houſes, though for the moſt part low, are commodious, and make a good appearance. They are all of baxareque and quincha. They appear, indeed, to be compoſed of more ſolid materials, both with regard to the thickneſs of the principal walls, and the imitation of cornices on them: and, that they may the better ſupport themſelves under the ſhocks of earthquakes, of which this city has had ſo many dreadful inſtances, the principal parts are of wood, mortiſed into rafters of the roof, and thoſe which ſerve for walls are lined both within and without with wild canes, and chaglas or oſiers; ſo that the timber-work is totally incloſed. The oſiers are plaſtered over with clay, and white-waſhed, but the fronts painted in imitation of free-ſtone. The pieces of timber, of which the roots are formed, and which, on the inſide, are decorated with elegant mouldings and other ornaments, are covered with clay, to preſerve them from the ſun.. This ſlender covering is ſufficient, as no violent rains are ever known here. Thus the houſes are in leſs danger than if built of more compact materials; for the whole building yields to the motions of the earthquakes, and the foundations, which are connected with the ſeveral parts of the building, follow the ſame motion, and, by that means, are not ſo eaſily thrown down. The wild canes, which ſerve for the inner parts of the walls, reſemble, in length and bigneſs, thoſe known in Europe, but without any cavity. The wood of them is very ſolid, and little ſubject to rot. Towards the eaſt and weſt parts of the city, but within the walls, are a great many fruit and kitchen gardens; and moſt of the principal houſes have gardens for entertainments, being continually refreſhed with water, by means of the canals. Lima is the ſee of an archbiſhop, and is divided into five pariſhes. The convents are very numerous. All the churches, both conventual and parochial, and alſo the chapels, are large, conſtructed partly of ſtone, and adorned with paintings and other decorations of great value. The riches and pomp of this city, eſpecially on ſolemn feſtivals, are aſtoniſhing. The altars, from their very baſes to the borders of the paintings, are covered with maſſive ſilver, wrought into various kinds of ornaments. The walls alſo of the churches are hung with velvet, or tapeſtry of equal value, adorned with gold and ſilver fringes, all of which, in this country, are remarkably dear; and on theſe are ſplendid pieces of plate, in various figures. If the eye be directed from the pillars, walls, and cieling, to the lower part of the church, it is equally dazzled with glittering objects, preſenting themſelves on all ſides; among which are candleſticks of maſſive ſilver, ſix or ſeven feet high, placed in two rows along the nave of the church, emboſſed tables of the ſame metal, ſupporting ſmaller candleſticks; and, in the intervals betwixt them, pedeſtals, on which ſtand the ſtatues of angels. In fine, the whole church is covered with plate, or ſomething equal to it in value; ſo that divine ſervice, in theſe churches, is performed with a magnificence ſcarcely to be imagined; and the ornaments, even on common days, with regard to their quantity and richneſs, exceed thoſe which many cities of Europe pride themſelves with diſplaying on the moſt extraordinary occaſions. The viceroys, whoſe power extends over all Peru, uſually reſide at Lima; but the province and audience of Quito has been detached from it: this government is triennial, though, at the expiration of that term, the ſovereign may prolong it. This office is of ſuch importance, that the viceroy enjoys all the privileges of royalty. He is abſolute in all affairs, whether political, military, civil, criminal, or relating to the revenue, having under him officers and tribunals for executing the ſeveral branches of government; ſo that the grandeur of this employment is, in every particular, equal to the title. For the ſafety of his perſon, and the dignity of his office, he has two bodies of guards; one of horſe, conſiſting of 160 men, a captain, and a lieutenant. The corporation of Lima conſiſts of regidores or aldermen, an alferez real, or ſheriff, and two alcaldes, or royal judges; all being noblemen of the firſt diſtinction in the city. Theſe have the direction of the police, and the ordinary adminiſtration of juſtice. The alcaldes preſide alternately every month; for, by a particular privilege of this city, the juriſdiction of its corregidor extends only to the Indians. Here is a court for the effects of deceaſed perſons, which takes cognizance of the goods of thoſe dying inteſtate, and without lawful heir; and likewiſe, of thoſe entruſted with the effects of other perſons. It conſiſts of a judge, who is generally one of the auditors, a counſellor, and an accomptant. The next tribunal is that of commerce, or the conſulada. Its principal officers are a preſident, and two conſuls. Lima has alſo a corregidor, whoſe juriſdiction extends to all Indians, both within the city, and five leagues round it. Here is an univerſity, and colleges for the education of natives. The inhabitants of Lima are compoſed of Whites or Spaniards, Negroes, Indians, Meſtizos, and other caſts, proceeding from the mixture of all three. The Spaniſh families are very numerous; Lima, according to the loweſt computation, containing 16 or 18,000 whites. The Negroes, Mulattoes, and their deſcendants, form the greateſt number of the inhabitants; and of theſe are the greateſt part of the mechanics. The third and laſt claſs of inhabitants, the Meſtizos, are few in proportion to the largeneſs of the city, and the multitudes of inhabitants. They are employed in agriculture, making earthen ware, and bringing all kinds of proviſions to market; domeſtic ſervices being performed by Negroes and Mulattoes, either ſlaves or free, though generally by the former. The uſual dreſs of the men differs very little from that worn in Spain; nor is the diſtinction between the ſeveral claſſes very great, for the uſe of all ſorts of cloth being allowed, every one wears what he can purchaſe: ſo that it is not uncommon to ſee a Mulatto, or any other mechanic, dreſſed in a tiſſue, equal to any thing that can be worn by a more opulent perſon. They all greatly affect fine clothes; and it may be ſaid, without exaggeration, that the fineſt ſtuffs, made in countries where induſtry is always inventing ſomething new, are more generally ſeen at Lima than in any other place, vanity and oſtentation not being reſtrained by cuſtom or law. In the choice of laces, the women carry their taſte to a prodigious exceſs; nor is this an emulation confined to perſons of quality, but has ſpread through all ranks, except the loweſt claſs of negroes. Their dreſs is very different from the European, which the cuſtom of the country alone can render excuſable; indeed, to Spaniards, at their firſt coming over, it appears extremely indecent. The women's dreſs conſiſts of a pair of ſhoes, a ſhift, a petticoat of dimity, an open petticoat, and a jacket, which, in ſummer, is of linen, in winter, of ſtuff. To this ſome add a mantelette, that the former may hang looſe. The lower claſs of women, whoſe whole ſtock of apparel ſeldom conſiſts of more than two ſhifts and a petticoat, wear bracelets, roſaries, and ſmall gold images, about their necks and arms, to the intrinſic value of fifty or ſixty crowns. The women are in general of a middling ſtature, handſome, genteel, and of very fair complexions without the help of art, with beautiful hair, and enchanting luſtre and dignity in their eyes. They are naturally gay, ſprightly, jocoſe without levity, and remarkably fond of muſic. The temperature of the air of Lima, and its alterations, are perfectly agreeable. And though the difference of the four ſeaſons are ſenſible, all of them are moderate, and none of them troubleſome: ſpring being towards the cloſe of the year, that is, towards the end of November, or beginning of December. But it is to be underſtood only of the heavens, as then the vapours, which filled the atmoſphere during the winter, ſubſide, the ſun, to the great joy of the inhabitants, again appears, and the country now begins to revive, which, during the abſence of its rays, had continued in a ſtate of languor. This is ſucceeded by ſummer, which, though hot, from the perpendicular direction of the ſun's rays, is far from being inſupportable; the heat, which would, indeed, otherwiſe be exceſſive, being moderated by the ſouth winds, which, at this ſeaſon, always blow, though with no great force. At the latter end of June, or the beginning of July, the winter begins, and continues till November or December, the autumn intervening between both. About this time, the ſouth winds begin to blow ſtronger, and bring cold with them; not, indeed, equal to that in countries where ſnow and ice are known, but ſo keen, that the light dreſſes are lain by, and cloth or other warm ſtuffs worn. As rain is ſeldom or never ſeen at Lima, ſo that place is alſo equally free from tempeſts, that thoſe who have neither viſited the mountains, or travelled into other parts, as Guayaquil or Chili, are abſolute ſtrangers to thunder and lightning, nothing of that kind being known here. One of the inconveniences of Lima, during the ſummer, is that of being tormented with fleas and bugs, from which the utmoſt care is not ſufficient to free the inhabitants. The moſchitos are very troubleſome, but much leſs ſo than the former. The next, and, indeed, a moſt dreadful circumſtance, is that of earthquakes, to which this country is ſo ſubject, that the inhabitants are under continual apprehenſious of being, from their ſuddenneſs and violence, buried in the ruins of their own houſes. Several deplorable inſtances of this kind have happened in this unfortunate city, and proved the total deſtruction of all its buildings. The firſt concuſſion, ſince the eſtabliſhment of the Spaniards in theſe parts, happened in 1582, a few years after the foundation of Lima; but the damage was much leſs than in ſome of the ſucceeding, being chiefly confined to the city of Arequipa, which being ſituated near that ſpot where the motion of the earth was moſt violent, the greateſt part of it was deſtroyed. On the 9th of July, 1586, Lima was viſited with another earthquake, and ſo violent, that, even to this time, it is ſolemnly commemorated. In 1609, another, like the former, happened. On the 27th of November, 1630, ſuch prodigious damage was done in this city by an earthquake, and the entire ruin of it apprehended, that, in acknowledgment of its deliverance, a feſtival, called Neuſtra Senora del Melagro, is annually celebrated on that day. In the year 1655, on the 3d of November, the moſt ſtately edifices, and a great number of houſes, were thrown down by an earthquake; the inhabitants fled into the country, and remained there ſeveral days, to avoid the danger they were threatened with in the city. On the 17th of June, 1678, another earth-quake happened, by which ſeveral houſes were deſtroyed, and the churches conſiderably damaged. One of the moſt dreadful of which we have any account, was that of the 20th of October, 1687. During this concuſſion, the ſea retired conſiderably from its bounds, and, returning in mountainous waves, totally overwhelmed Callao, and the neighbouring parts, together with the miſerable inhabitants. Others happened on the 29th of September, 1697, on the 14th of July, 1699, the 6th of February, 1716, on the 8th of January, 1725, and on the 2d of December, 1732; in the years 1690, 1734, and 1745: all theſe were leſs terrible than one on the 28th of October, 1746. In little more than three minutes, the greateſt part, if not all the buildings, great and ſmall, in the whole city, were deſtroyed, burying, under their ruins, thoſe inhabitants who had not made ſufficient haſte into the ſtreets and ſquares, the only places of ſafety in theſe terrible convulſions of nature. The diſtempers moſt common at Lima are malignant, intermittent, and catarrhous fevers, pleuriſies, and conſtipations; and theſe rage continually in the city. The ſmall-pox is alſo known here, but is not annual; though, when it prevails, great numbers are ſwept away by it. It is natural to think, that a country, where rain is ſeldom or never known, muſt, of neceſſity, be totally barren; whereas the country of Lima enjoys a fertility to be envied, producing all kinds of grain, and a prodigious variety of fruits. Here induſtry and art ſupply that moiſture which the clouds ſeem to withhold; and the ſoil is, by this means, rendered remarkably fruitful, amidſt a continual drought. One of the principal cares of the Yncas was the cutting and diſpoſing, in the moſt advantageous manner, trenches, or ſmall canals, in order to conduct the waters of the rivers to nouriſh every part, and render large fields capable of producing grain. The Spaniards, finding theſe uſeful works ready executed to their hands, took care to keep them in the ſame order, and by theſe are watered the ſpacious fields of wheat and barley, large meadows, plantations of ſugar-canes, and olive-trees, vineyards, and gardens of all kinds; all yield uncommon plenty. Before the earthquake, in 1687, when this city ſuffered in ſo deplorable a manner, the harveſts of wheat and barley were ſufficient to ſupply the wants of the country, without any importation, eſpecially of wheat; but by this convulſion of nature, the ſoil was ſo vitiated, that the wheat rotted ſoon after it was ſown, occaſioned, probably, by the vaſt clouds of ſulphureous particles then exhaled, and the prodigious quantities of nitrous effluvia diffuſed through it. This obliged the owners of the lands to apply them to other uſes, and accordingly many of them were turned into meadows of clover, plantations of ſugar-canes, and other vegetables, which they found not ſubject to the ſame misfortune. After the land had continued forty years in this ſtate of ſterility, the huſbandmen began to perceive ſuch an alteration in the ſoil, as promiſed a ſpeedy return to its former goodneſs. Accordingly, ſome trials were ſucceſsfully made with wheat, and, by degrees, the grain was found to thrive, as before that dreadful event. The other parts of the country are taken up with plantations already mentioned, among which thoſe of canes are not the leaſt, and yield an excellent kind of ſugar. The olive plantations appear like thick foreſts; for, beſides the height, magnitude, and fullneſs of leaves of theſe trees, in all which they exceed thoſe of Spain, the country contiguous to the city is covered with gardens, producing all the herbs and fruits known in Spain, and of the ſame goodneſs and beauty. The grapes are of various kinds; and among them one called the Italian, very large and delicious. The fertility of the ſoil, the goodneſs of the climate, and the convenient ſituation of Lima, concur to maintain in it a conſtant plenty. The bread of Lima is inconteſtably the beſt in all this part of America, both with regard to its colour and taſte, the goodneſs of the corn being improved by the manner of working it; and, at the ſame time, ſo reaſonable, that the inhabitants uſe no other. Their mutton is the moſt common food, and is very palatable, from the nitrous paſtures where the ſheep are fattened. The beef, alſo, is good; but little eaten, except by the Europeans, ſo that two or three beaſts ſupply the city for a week. Here is, alſo, plenty of poultry, partridges, turtle-doves, &c. Pork is, alſo, in great abundance. From the mountains are often ſent, by way of preſent, frozen calves; being killed there, and left two or three days on the heaths to freeze, after which they are carried to Lima, where they may be kept any time required without the leaſt tendency to putrefaction. Of fiſh, there is ſtill a greater variety daily brought from the neighbouring parts. The whole coaſts abound with ſuch ſhoals of anchovies, as exceed all compariſon; and beſides the vaſt quantities caught by fiſhermen, they are the chief food of innumerable flights of birds, with which all thoſe iſlands abound, and commonly called guanoes. Moſt of the dried fruits are brought from Chili; and by means of the trade carried on between the two kingdoms, Lima is ſupplied with all ſorts of fruits known in Spain, as almonds, walnuts, filberts, pears, apples, &c. ſo that their tables cannot in this reſpect fail of plenty and elegance, having at one time the fruits of the different ſeaſons, both of America and Europe. But amidſt this plenty, every thing is very dear, the price being four or five times as much as at Quito, bread only excepted. Wine, oil, and dried fruits are ſome of the cheapeſt. The poorer claſs, however, as the negroes and other caſts, live tolerably well; fiſh, which is little eſteemed by the opulent, ſelling at a low price; the ſame may be ſaid of mutton and beef, with regard to the inhabitants of this country in general. Sweetmeats are, alſo, here in the ſame plenty as in the other parts of South America, though ſeldom eaten, except at deſſerts, and even then very moderately. The city of Lima could not have attained to ſuch ſplendour, if, beſides being the capital of Peru, it had not been alſo the general ſtaple of the kingdom. All the wealth of the ſouthern provinces is brought to Lima, where it is embarked on board the fleet, which at the time of the galleons, ſails from Callao to Panama. The proprietors of the treaſure commit it to the merchants of Lima, who traffic at the fair with this and their own ſtock. The ſame fleet returns to the harbour of Paita, where the European merchandizes of value purchaſed at Porto Bello fair are landed, in order to avoid the delay of ſailing to Callao, and ſent by land to Lima, on droves of mules; but thoſe of leſs value are carried thither by the ſame ſhips. On the arrival of theſe commodities at Lima, the merchants remit to their correſpondents ſuch parts as they had a commiſſion to purchaſe, reſerving the reſt in warehouſes to diſpoſe of on their account to traders, who at this time reſort to Lima, or ſend them to their factors in the inland provinces, who remit the returns in money, or bills of exchange, to their principals at Lima. Theſe conſignments are repeated till they have diſpoſed of their whole ſtock. Thus the cargo of a flotilla laſts a conſiderable time, there being no immediate vent for the whole. The produce of the ſales in the inland parts of the kingdom is ſent to Lima in bars of ſilver and pignas, and is coined at the mint in this city. Thus the traders have not only a great profit in the ſale of their goods, but alſo in the returns of their ſilver, which they take at a lower rate than is allowed them for it. All theſe ſales may, therefore, be conſidered as an exchange of one commodity for another; for he who ſells the goods agrees, both with regard to their price, and the rate in which he is to take the ſilver bars, or pignas; and thus two ſpecies of trade are tranſacted at the ſame time, one a ſale of goods, and the other of ſilver. The remittances ſent to Lima during the interval between the flotillas, are laid out in manufactures of the country, great quantities of which come from the province of Quito; and this trade is carried on in all reſpects like the former; for the conſumption of them being equal, or rather larger, they are not leſs neceſſary here than in Europe, being worn by all the lower claſs of people, who cannot afford the price of European ſtuffs; and the generality of traders who come to Lima, purchaſe ſtuffs of both kinds, that they may be provided with aſſortments for cuſtomers of all ranks. Beſides this commerce, which is the moſt conſiderable, and tranſacted wholly by means of this city, Lima has alſo its particular trade with the other parts of North and South America. The moſt conſiderable commodity received from the former is ſnuff, which is brought from the Havannah to Mexico, and, after being there improved, is forwarded to Lima, and from thence ſent into the other provinces. This trade is carried on nearly in the ſame manner as that of Panama; but thoſe who deal in this commodity, never trouble themſelves with any other except perfumes, as ambergriſe, muſk, &c. and porcelain ware. Some of theſe traders are ſettled at Lima, others reſide there occaſionally, but are in general factors to the merchants at Mexico. Lima alſo receives from the ports of New Spain naphtha, tar, iron, and ſome indigo, for dying. The country of Terra Firma ſends to Lima leaf-tobacco and pearls, which here meet with a good market: for beſides the great numbers worn by the ladies, no mulatto woman is without ſome ornament or other made of them. The coaſts of Naſca and Piſco ſend to Lima wine, brandy, raiſins, olives, and oil; and the kingdom of Chili, wheat, flour, lard, leather, cordage wines, dried fruits, and ſome gold. Beſides theſe, all ſorts of goods are likewiſe laid up at Callao, in ſtore-houſes built for that purpoſe; ſome on account of the owners who remit them, others for maſters of ſhips, who purchaſe them on the ſpot, where they grow, or are made. Every Monday during the whole year, there is a fair at Callao, whither the proprietors or dealers reſort from all parts; and the goods are carried according to the buyer's direction, on droves of mules kept there for that purpoſe by the maſters of the warehouſes, and whoſe profits wholly conſiſt in the hire of theſe beaſts. The proviſions brought to Lima are not only ſufficient to ſupply its numerous inhabitants, but great quantities of all kinds are ſent to Quito, and its juriſdiction; to Valles and Panama. Copper and tin in bars brought from Coquimbo; from the mountains of Caxamarca and Chacapoyas, canvas made of cotton for ſails and other ſtuffs, of that kind, and alſo of Pita: Cordovan leather, and ſoap are made all over Valles. From the ſouthern provinces, as Plata, Oruro, Potoſi, and Cuſco, is ſent Vicuna wool, for making hats, and ſome ſtuffs of a peculiar or fineneſs. Laſtly, from Paraguay, the herb called by that name is ſent, which there is an amazing conſumption, it being ſent from Lima among the provinces, as far as Quito. There is no province in Peru which does not remit to Lima its products and manufactures: and ſupplies itſelf from hence with the neceſſary commodities. Thus Lima is the emporium to which people reſort from all parts; and trade being always in a conſtant circulation, beſides the continual reſort of ſtrangers, the families of rank are enabled to ſupport the expences of that ſplendour already mentioned; for without ſuch continual aſſiſtance, they muſt either contract their expences, or fall victims to their oſtentation. Lima, according to the obſervations of Don Ulloa, from whom the above account is taken, is ſituated Long. 299. 27. E. Peak of Teneriffe. Lat. 12. 2. 31. S.

LIMBERG, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Stiria: 12 miles S. Voitſberg.

LIMBURG (Duchy of), a principality of Germany, in what was formerly the circle of Burgundy, now a province of the Netherlands, bounded on the north by the duchy of Juliers, on the eaſt by the electorate of Cologn and duchy of Juliers, and on the ſouth and weſt by the biſhopric of Liege: about ten leagues in length, and eight in breadth, it is alſo called the country on the other ſide of the Meuſe, but at preſent this name is peculiarly appropriated to that part which the States General poſſeſs in this country. It yields good arable ground, and abounds, in particular, in a fine breed of cattle. In the neighbourhood of Limburg are found iron, lead, and calamy. The origin of the ancient counts of Limburg is obſcure. Probably, this houſe took its riſe about the middle of the tenth century. Henry I. count of Limburg, who lived in the year 1071, married Judith, only daughter to Frederick, of Luxemburg, and duke of the Lower Lorrain, with whom he obtained conſiderable eſtates on the rivers Ourt and Ambleve. His ſon, Henry II. was elected duke of Lower Lorrain, and bore the title thereof inſtead of that of a count, and all his poſterity had been ſtyled duke of Limburg after him. The male branch of theſe dukes, however, becoming extinct in Waleran, a very bloody war was kindled on account of this country. Adolph, count of Bergen, who was next heir, in the year 1282 and 1283, ceded all his right in the duchy of Limburg to John I. duke of Brabant, who upon that became involved with Reynald or Reinhold I. count of Gueldres, who had taken poſſeſſion of the duchy, in a grievous war, which was concluded with the battle near Woringen; after which the dukes of Brabant took poſſeſſion of Limburg. This duchy afterwards, together with the other provinces of the Netherlands, devolved to the dukes of Burgundy, and from them to the houſe of Auſtria. A part of the counties of Fauquemont and Dalem, as alſo of the country of Rolduc, deſcended, as well by virtue of the peace of Munſter, as of the ſtipulation, made in the year 1661, at the Hague, to the States General.

LIMBURG, a town of Germany, and capital of the duchy ſo called, ſituated near the river Weſe, or Weze, in a fertile country, on an agreeable mountain. It was heretofore regularly fortified, with a caſtle built on a rock, and defended with towers and baſtions, built of free-ſtone. The Dutch took it in the year 1633. In 1675, the French beſieged it, under the command of the prince of Condé; the king with another army, hindering the prince of Orange from advancing to its relief; ſo that after the trenches had been opened eleven days, the prince of Naſſau Siegen, governor of the province and city, was obliged to ſurrender. In the year 1677, the French, foreſeeing that it muſt be given up at a peace, pulled down the caſtle and demoliſhed the fortifications, and ſet fire to all the houſes except the church and the parſonage-houſe. The year following it was reſtored to Spain, with the province, by the fifth article of the treaty of Nimmegen: at the death of Charles II. when Philip, duke of Anjou, mounted the throne of Spain, the troops of his grandfather, Louis XIV. took poſſeſſion of Limburg, as well as the other towns of the Spaniſh Netherlands, and fortified it again; the comte de Regnac, lieutenant-general of France, being appointed governor. In the year 1703, it was taken by the allies, under the command of the hereditary prince of Heſſe-Caſſel, and the garriſon made priſoners of war; a little after, Charles III. was inaugurated duke of Limberg. By the treaty of Baden, it remained to the houſe of Auſtria, but the fortifications were deſtroyed. Near Limburg, are many quarries of different kinds of marble; the precipices, mountains, and rocks round about are romantic; the air is wholeſome, and the inhabitants have hardly any diſeaſe except old age. The magiſtracy conſiſts of a mayor, ſeven echevins, and a greffier, who muſt be licentiates in law of the univerſity of Louvain, and equally ſkilled in the French and Flemiſh languages. They have a conſiderable manufacture of woollen cloth; and ſome excellent cheeſe is made in the environs; there are alſo ſome iron mines near it: 20 miles ESE. Liege, and 46 N. Luxemburg. Long. 23. 31. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 36. N.

LIMBURG, a lordſhip, and principality of Germany; this ſigniory lies in Swabia, being environed by the duchy of Wurtemberg, the provoſtſhip of Elwangen, the principality of Anſpach, and the territory of the imperial city of Swabian-Hall; and in its greateſt extent, from ſouth to north, is almoſt twenty miles, but from weſt to eaſt only eighteen. The laſt count of Limburg dying in the year 1713, the king of Pruſſia took poſſeſſion of his country, but at length ceded it to the allodial heirs, and the emperor ſequeſtrated the imperial fiefs; but in 1728, conferred the inveſtiture of them on king Frederick William, as imperial ſub-vaſſal. In the year 1742, king Frederick II. transferred theſe Limburg imperial fiefs to the princely houſe of Brandenburg Anſpach. The whole lordſhip contributes to one Roman month, ſixty-four florins, and to each chamber term, forty-three rixdollars nineteen kruitzers.

LIMBURG, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and duchy of Juliers: 2 miles NW. Sittart.

LIMBURG, a town of Germany. in the circle of the Lower Rhine, and archbiſhopric of Treves, ſituated on the Lahn, formerly governed by its particular counts, who became extinct in the beginning of the 5th century: 26 miles N. Mentz. and 76 ENE. Treves. Long. 25. 43. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 24. N.

LIMBURG, or Hohen Limberg, a town and citadel of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, which gives name to a county, a fief of the county of Mark: 4 miles NNW. Altena.

LIME, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Connecticut: 7 miles W. New London.

LIMERICK, a county of Ireland in the province of Munſter, bounded on the north by Clare, from which it is ſeparated by the Shannon and Tipperary, on the eaſt by Tipperary, on the ſouth by Cork, and on the weſt by Kerry, 40 miles from eaſt to weſt, and from 17 to 25 from north to ſouth; containing 125 pariſhes, and about 170,000 inhabitants. The ſoil is fertile, and eſpecially rich in paſture, the beſt cattle ſlaughtered at Cork being ſent from this county; towards the ſouth-eaſt, on the borders of Tipperary, it is mountainous, as likewiſe towards the ſouth-weſt, on the borders of Kerry. Several rivers water it, the principal of which is the Maig. Eight members are returned to the Iriſh parliament, viz. for the county, the city of Limerick, Aſkeaton, and Killmallock, two each. Limerick is the capital.

LIMERICK, a city of Ireland, and capital of a county of the ſame name, ſituated on the river Shannon. It is a county of itſelf. The ancient part of the town is built in a large iſland, which lies cloſe to the eaſtern ſhore; and while it continued a fortified place, was eſteemed the ſtrongeſt in Ireland. It has been diſmantled about thirty years, and has increaſed prodigiouſly within that period, by the addition of handſome ſtreets and quays; its commerce has kept pace with its ſize, and quantities of beef and other proviſions are exported from Limerick: the number of houſes in this city may be eſtimated at 4900, and the inhabitants at upwards of 40,000: 45 miles N. Cork, and 92 WSW. Dublin. Long. 8. 32. W. Greenwich. Lat. 52. 39. N.—In the year 1690, after the battle of the Boyne, this city being garriſoned by the troops of king James II. was beſieged by the troops of king William III. commanded by himſelf in perſon; but after loſing 1200 men, the enterpriſe was abandoned. In the year 1691, it was again inveſted, and on the 1ſt of October, ſurrendered on capitulation, after a ſiege of about ſix weeks.

LIN-CHAN-OEI, a fort of China, in the province of Chan-long: 22 miles S. Kiao.

LINCOLN, a city of England, and capital of Lincolnſhire, ſituated on the river Witham: it is a very ancient city, and was formerly ſurrounded with walls, and defended with towers, and was one of the chief towns for buying and ſelling wool. We are told, that in Edward the Confeſſor's time, Lincoln contained 1070 houſes, and 900 burgeſſes. William the Conqueror built a caſtle to keep the citizens in awe. Lincoln formerly contained fifty-two pariſh churches, with many religious houſes, but in the ſecond year of Edward VI. the number of churches was reduced to fifteen. Lincoln was erected into a biſhopric, in the year 1088, this ſee being removed from Dorcheſter. The length of the cathedral from eaſt to weſt (including the walls) is 530 feet. The length of the great tranſept from north to ſouth is 227. From the pavement to the top of the lantern in the Rood tower, is 124 feet. Before the reformation took place, this cathedral was undoubtedly the fineſt and richeſt in the whole kingdom, and the number and ſplendour of its tombs almoſt incredible. In the reign of king Henry the Eighth, in the year 1540, by the king's orders, there were carried from this church into his coffers, no leſs than 2621 ounces of pure gold, and 4285 ounces of ſilver; beſides an amazing quantity of diamonds, pearls, ſapphires, rubies, turquoiſes, carbuncles, and two ſhrines, one of pure gold, called St. Hugh's, the other of ſilver, called Biſhop St. John of D'Alderby. A ſecond plunder was committed on this church, in the year 1548, during the preſidence of biſhop Hobech, who being a zealous reformiſt, gave up all the remaining treaſure, which Henry had thought proper to leave behind. Lincoln, at this day, is a large, long, ſtraggling town, chiefly conſiſting of one ſtreet. There are ſeveral good buildings in it, both below and above the hill. It has a plentiful weekly market on Friday, well ſupplied with proviſions of all kinds, and its corn and wool trade is very great: large quantities of which are exported into Yorkſhire, the veſſels bringing coals back. Upon the plain, on the north ſide of Lincoln, was fought the famous battle between the friends of the empreſs Maud, and king Stephen, in which that prince was defeated and taken priſoner. Upon Lincoln-heath were likewiſe fought ſeveral bloody battles, between the forces of Cromwell, and the royal army. Lincoln is ſo full of the ruins of monaſteries and religious houſes, that the very barns, ſtables, out-houſes, and even ſome of the hog ſtyer, are built with arched windows and doors. The ruins of the caſtle, are venerable pieces of antiquity; and from its bold and noble ſituation upon a high hill, it muſt have been a place of prodigious ſtrength. The county-gaol is now ſituated in the caſtle-yard. It ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament, being ſummoned, with London and York, in the forty-ninth of Henry III.: 53 miles NE. Derby, and 133 N. London.

LINCOLN, a county of United America, in the ſtate of Virginia.

LINCOLN, a county of United America, in the ſtate of Maſſachuſetts.

LINCOLN, a county of United America, in the ſtate of Kentucky.

LINCOLNSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the north by the river Humber, which divides it from Yorkſhire, on the eaſt by the German Sea, on the ſouth by Norfolk, Cambridgeſhire, and Northamptonſhire, and on the weſt by Rutlandſhire, Leiceſterſhire, Nottinghamſhire, and Yorkſhire, 77 miles in length from north to ſouth, and 48 from eaſt to weſt. It is divided into 30 hundreds, which contain one city (Lincoln) 33 towns, and 630 pariſhes. The number of acres is eſtimated at 1,893,100, of which Mr. Stone, in his View of the Agriculture of the County, ſuppoſes there may be 473,000 acres of incloſed marſh and fen land, 200,000 commons, waſtes, and unembanked ſalt marſhes, 268,000 common fields, 25,000 wood land, 927,120 incloſed up-land. Every ſoil in the united kingdoms, may be found in this county, in conſiderable quantities, from the ſharpeſt ſand and lighteſt moor, to the ſtrongeſt clay, in all its various mixtures and qualities. The air and climate of this county, in point of ſalubrity, is, upon the higheſt part of it, equal to any in the kingdom. Upon the fenny and marſhy parts, it has been very much improved of late years, ſince the drainage has been more attended to; and at this time, the inhabitants of the county have no dread of their healths being impaired, in ſhifting their abodes, even at advanced periods of life, from the upper part called the Woulds, to the loweſt part of the fens and marſhes. Beſides the diviſion into hundreds, Lincolnſhire is alſo divided into three diſtricts, Lindſey, Keſteven, and Holland. Of theſe Lindſey is much the largeſt, comprehending all the country from Foſſdike, and the Witham northwards. It is, upon the whole, the higheſt part of this county, though without any eminence which deſerves the name of a hill. Towards the north-eaſtern part is a large tract of heathy land, called the Wolds, of which the ſouthern portion is well inhabited, but the northern very thin of people. Great flocks of ſheep are bred throughout this tract. The north-weſtern part of Lindſey, contains the river-iſland of Axholm, formed by the Trent, Dun, and Idle: a rich low tract, in which flax is cultivated. The diſtrict of Keſteven contains the weſtern part of the county, from the middle to the ſouthern extremity. It poſſeſſes variety of ſoil; but on the whole, though intermixed with large heaths, is a fertile country. The principal of theſe heaths, are thoſe of Ancaſter and Lincoln, forming a very extenſive tract, which has, however, been of late years in great part encloſed. The chief river of Keſteven, is the Witham. Part of the fens are in the diſtrict of Keſteven; but the much greater part in the remaining and ſmaller one of Holland, which occupies the ſouth-eaſtern quarter of Lincolnſhire, being contiguous to the ſhallow inlet of the ſea, called the Waſh. With reſpect to the general products of Lincolnſhire, its higher grounds yield grain of all ſorts in great abundance; and its lower, oats, hemp, flax, woad, and other articles of culture. But it is particularly diſtinguiſhed as a grazing county, and is remarkable for rearing all kinds of animals to the greateſt ſize and weight. Its horſes, horned cattle, and ſheep, are all of the largeſt breed. The latter are clothed with a long thick wool, peculiarly fitted for the worſted and coarſe woollen manufactures, of which great quantities are ſent into Yorkſhire and other counties. Lincolnſhire is not itſelf a manufacturing county (at leaſt only in a very ſmall degree) and indeed has declined from its ancient populouſneſs and conſequence. A principal reaſon of this is the ſingular decay of its ſeaports, which, though formerly numerous, are now almoſt entirely choaked up with ſand, and ſome of them quite deſerted by the ocean. The long bow-like coaſt is fronted by ſand-hills or ſalt-marſhes; and, like thoſe in the Dutch ſtates, ſecured from the waves by dykes: it is ſo low as to be viſible only to a ſmall diſtance from the ſea. The mouth of the Witham is now the ſole inlet fit for the purpoſe of navigation. The towns are Boſton, Grantham, Grimſby, Stamford, Alford, Barton, Binbrook, Bolinbroke, Bourn, Burgh, Burton, Caſtor, Crowland, Crowle, Deeping, Donnington, Folkingham, Gainſborough, Glamford-Briggs, Holdbeach, Horncaſtle, Kirton-Lindſay, Louth, Market Raiſin, Saltfleet, Sleaford, Spalding, Spilſby, Stanton, Tatterſal, Wainfleet, and Wragby. The four firſt, with the city of Lincoln, and the county, return each two members to the Britiſh parliament.

LINDAHL, a town of Norway: 140 miles N. Chriſtiania.

LINDAU, an abby of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, ſituated in the imperial town of Lindau, an immediate foundation of the empire, the abbeſs whereof is a princeſs, and ever ſince the time of the emperor Frederick III. ſtyles herſelf ſo. The aſſeſſment of the abby in the matricula of the empire, was formerly five foot, or twenty florins, but in the year 1682, an abatement was made, and it is now reduced to ſeven florins. To the chamber at Wetzlar, it is rated at 50 rixdollars, 64 kruitzers.

LINDAU, an imperial city of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, on an iſland, in the lake of Conſtance, but has a communication with the continent, by means of a bridge. This iſland is divided by an arm of the lake, in ſuch a manner as to form another ſmall iſland, which is ſeparated from the city, and conſiſts of vineyards and gardens, being walled quite round. On account of this ſituation it is, that Lindau has been ſtyled the Venice of Swabia. The greateſt part of the burghers here, are Lutherans. The pariſh church is dedicated to St. Stephen. This town has alſo a well endowed hoſpital, and a grammar-ſchool, conſiſting of four claſſes. The caſtle, and the Heyden Maur, or Heathen Wall, as it is called, ſtanding near the gate at the bridge, which leads to the continent, are reckoned Roman works; the latter of which is attributed to Tiberius Nero, and the former to Conſtantinus Chlorus, at the time of the encampments in this iſland, during their expeditions againſt the Vindelici and Alemanni. It is alſo ſuppoſed that near this caſtle, formerly, ſtood a town; and that the little church of St. Peter here was built on the firſt introduction of Chriſtianity into this country. In the year 948, Lindau being laid in aſhes by Hermann, duke of Swabia, a great number of the inhabitants betook themſelves to Eſchach, on the continent, which by means of this emigration ſoon became a thriving town. But in the eleventh century, this place being conſumed by fire, they purchaſed their freedom of their lord, count Hugo, of Bregenz, returned again to the iſland, and rebuilt their original town of Lindau, which in the years 1264 and 1347, was again almoſt totally conſumed by fire. By king Rodolpho's charter of 1275, the town appears, both at that time, and a long while before, to have been imperial. The emperors Charles IV. and Wenceſlaus promiſed to maintain it as ſuch. In 1396, it procured itſelf for ever the redemption of the imperial vogtey or prefecturate. In the year 1647, the Swedes beſieged this town for nine weeks, but were at laſt compelled to retire. The aſſeſſment to the matricula, was, in the year 1728, 130 florins; and the tax to the imperial chamber 150 rixdollars. Its territory comprehends 14 villages: 19 miles E. Conſtance, and 46 ENE. Zurich. Long. 27. 15. E. Ferro. Lat. 47. 33. N.

LINDESNESS, or The Naze, a cape on the ſouth coaſt of Norway, on the North Sea, which joins to the main land by a very narrow iſthmus. The inhabitants have formerly attempted, for the conveniency of navigation, to cut a channel through this ſmall neck of land, and to build a town there; but this ſcheme was found impracticable, by reaſon of the rocks that obſtructed the execution of it. The cape projects into the ſea about a Norway mile towards the ſouth-weſt, and is built half a mile broad. It is a high, barren, rocky promontory; however, it has twelve peaſant's houſes on it. This cape is commonly called The Naze. Long. 7. 12. E. Greenwich. Lat. 58. 1. N.

LINDEWIESE, a town of Sileſia, in the principality of Neiſſe: 11 miles SE. Neiſſe.

LINGE, or Linghe, a river of Holland, which runs into the Wahal, at Gorcum.

LINGEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and capital of a county of the ſame name. It is ſituated not far from the Embs, and was formerly fortified, but, at preſent, is ſmall, and barely ſurrounded with a ditch. This town is the ſeat of the regency of the united counties of Lingen and Tecklenburg, and likewiſe, of the deputations of the war and domain chamber of Minden. In it is a Calviniſt, a Lutheran, and a Roman Catholic church. The academical gymnaſium here was founded, in the year 1697, by William III. prince of Orange. About a quarter of a mile's diſtance from the town, to the north of it, is a paſſage over the Embs, which is called The Lingen Ferry, and belongs to the king of Pruſſia: 27 miles ESE. Covorden. Long. 24. 54. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 35. N.—In the year 1518, this city was taken from the count of Tecklenburg, by Eric, duke of Saxony, and biſhop of Munſter; but in the year 1526, it was retaken by Charles of Egmont, and reſtored to the count. In the year 1599, Maurice prince of Naſſau, took it for the States, after a ſiege, though well fortified and defended by a good garriſon; and in the year 1605, it was taken by the marquis of Spinola.

LINGEN, a county of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, bounded on the north by the biſhopric of Munſter, on the eaſt by the biſhopric of Oſnabruck, on the ſouth by the county of Tecklinburg, and on the weſt by Bentheim. It was formerly a prefecturate of the county of Tecklinburg, and is now, like it, in poſſeſſion of the king of Pruſſia. The ſoil is not very fertile, but, in ſeveral places, are ſome mines of coal, and quarries of ſtone. It is divided into Upper and Lower: the principal town of the latter is Lingen, and Ibbenbuhren of the former.

LISBON, a city of Portugal, and capital of the kingdom, on the Tagus, It is built in the form of an amphitheatre, on ſeven large hills, not broad, but two leagues in length. Some of the ſtreets are more than a league in length. Since the year 1716, the city has been divided into Eaſt and Weſt; the former under the archbiſhop, the latter under the patriarch; and all public acts and letters of exchange announce on which part they have been tranſacted. The patriarch is the chief of all the pariſhes of the city, and the patriarchal church is ſo adorned, that it ſeems to have abſorbed ſeveral years revenue of Braſil. It is remarkable, that the pipes of the organ are placed horizontally. Here the patriarch officiates with more pomp than the pope himſelf. Liſbon is ancient, and firſt called Oliſippo, perhaps from the word Oliſippo, which, among the Phœnicians, the firſt merchants who traded there, is ſaid to ſignify an Agreeable Bay, which the harbour, in fact, is. The Goths called it Oliſipona, and the Moors Oliſibona, from whence the preſent word Liſbon ſeems to be derived. That which chiefly enriches Liſbon, and is the occaſion of its grandeur, is its harbour, which is large, deep, ſafe, and commodious. It has many beautiful edifices, and they reckon more than 20,000 houſes, forty pariſh churches, and fifty convents of both ſexes. The cathedral ſituated on an eminence, is ancient and gloomy, but the riches of the Portugueſe have rendered it magnificent. It is dedicated to St. Vincent, who ſuffered martyrdom near the cape which bears his name, and whoſe body was guarded by ravens, and preſerved from being devoured by wild beaſts, to which it had been expoſed. Two ravens have been kept as a memorial, and a cheſt is appropriated for the purpoſe of receiving the offerings of the devout for their ſupport. The royal palace fronts the Tagus; it is a large and magnificent building, and contains a library, collected at vaſt expence, by John V. The number of inhabitants is ſuppoſed to be about 270,000, of which the Negroes and Mulattoes are ſuppoſed to make about a ſixth part. This city has been often conquered and re-conquered by different people. In the year 1147, it was taken from the Moors by Don Alphonſo, aſſiſted by a fleet of French, Engliſh, and Germans, who were ſailing to the Holy Land on a croiſade. In the year 1373, Henry king of Caſtile attacked Liſbon, by ſea and land, and as the inhabitants were without ammunition to defend it, he ſucceeded. The day after the battle of Alcantara, in which the Portugueſe were defeated by the duke of Alva, the conqueror entered Liſbon, and ſeverely puniſhed the friends of the duke of Bragança; but on the firſt of December, 1640, the Portugueſe proclaimed the duke of Bragança, in this town, king of Portugal; and he took the name of John IV. Liſbon was erected into a biſhopric in the 5th century, and when it was retaken from the Moors, by Don Alphonſo, the biſhopric was re-eſtabliſhed by pope Eugenius III: and in the year 1390, it was erected into an archbiſhopric In the year 1706, pope Clement XI. conſecrated a chapel in the king's palace, as a patriarchal church, and granted it a chapter. The patriarch is generally a cardinal, and exerciſes his epiſcopal functions in this chapel. Liſbon is a place of great trade, and many foreign merchants, both Catholic and Proteſtants, reſide here, Engliſh, French, Dutch, &c. being the grand magazine of all goods brought from Brazil and other colonies belonging to the Portugueſe. The harbour will contain 1000 veſſels, but the entrance requires the aſſiſtance of a pilot, on account of the bar, which is ſometimes dangerous. The city is walled round, with ſeventy-ſeven towers, and thirty-ſix gates. It has ſo increaſed by degrees particularly towards the weſt, that the old walls now divide the two dioceſes. John IV. formed a deſign of ſurrounding the whole city with a high wall; but the work was diſcontinued, after a prodigious expence. In the centre of the city, on one of the mountains, ſtands a citadel which commands the whole place, and has caſerns in it, in which four regiments of foot are conſtantly quartered. Cloſe by the ſea, at the diſtance of about three Portugueſe miles from the city, both the entrances to the harbour are defended by two forts. One mile from Liſbon, ſtands the fort of Belem, which commands the entrance into the city, where all ſhips coming up the Tagus muſt bring to, and give an account of themſelves. In the year 1755, this city was almoſt deſtroyed by an earthquake, but ſince that time rebuilt. The climate of Liſbon is ſuppoſed to be equal to any in Spain or Portugal. Long. 9. 32. E. Ferro. Lat. 38. 43. N.

LISSA, or Lechno, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Poſnania. Liſſa was formerly only a village, but when great numbers of Proteſtants from Sileſia, Bohemia, Moravia, and Auſtria, removed to this place, and obtained the free exerciſe of their religion, it conſiderably increaſed, and was raiſed to a town. The inhabitants carry on a good trade. Here is a Lutheran church, a ſeminary, and a Calviniſt church. In the year 1656, the inhabitants quitted the town for fear of the Poliſh troops, who plundered it and laid it in aſhes. In 1707, it was alſo laid waſte by the Ruſſians; but afterwards it was rebuilt with great improvements: 44 miles SSW. Poſen, and 55 W. Kalitch.

LISSA, an iſland in the Adriatic, about 8 leagues in circumference, near the coaſt of Dalmatia, anciently called Iſſa, and celebrated for its commerce and its marine. It was in alliance with Rome, and warred with the kings of Illyrium; at the decline of the Roman empire, this iſland ſunk too, and became ſucceſſively dependent on Narenta, Leſſina and Venice. It abounds in mountains, which contain marble, interſected by fertile vallies; vines, olives, mulberries, almonds, and figs, flouriſh; and the mountains are richly furniſhed with odoriferous plants, from which the bees collect an exquiſite kind of honey: but the principal riches of the iſland ariſe from its fiſhery, eſpecially of ſardines; it contains two towns, and ſeveral villages. Long. 34. 10. LI-SIUEN, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Chen-ſi: 7 miles S. Kan.

LISY-SUR-OURCQ, a town of France, in the department of the Seine and Marne, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Meaux, on the Marne: 7 miles NE. Meaux.

LITADA, a town of the iſland of Negroponte, in the Grecian Archipelago: 48 miles NW. Negroponte.

LITCHFIELD, a city of England, in the county of Stafford, ſituated on a ſmall river which runs into the Trent, about 3 miles from the town. It is a county of itſelf, with power of holding aſſizes, and determining caſes of life and death. It was erected into an archbiſhopric in the latter part of the 8th century by king Offa, but ſoon after was reduced to a biſhopric, under the archbiſhopric of Canterbury. In the year 1075, the ſee was removed to Cheſter: and, in 1102, to Coventry; but, not long after, was reſtored to Litchfield, united with Coventry. The cathedral was firſt built in the year 300, and has been ſeveral times rebuilt and enlarged, particularly by biſhop Hacket, after the reſtoration, in the laſt century, and in the year 1789, when it underwent a thorough repair. Here are three other churches, and formerly there was a caſtle, now deſtroyed. The ſouth ſide of the river is called the City, and the other the Cloſe. When the civil war broke out, the Cloſe was garriſoned for the king, againſt the army of the parliament, under Lord Brooke and Sir John Gill; but was taken after a month's ſiege. In the courſe of the war it was taken by prince Rupert, but fell at length, with the reſt of the kingdom, to the republican party. It is governed by two bailiffs, recorder, burgeſs, &c. and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. There are two markets weekly, on Tueſday and Friday: 18 miles NW. Coventry, and 119 NW. London.

LITCHFIELD, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Connecticut, which gives name to a county: 26 miles W. Hartford.

LITHAY, or Litcy, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Carniola, on the Save: 8 miles NNE. Weixelburg, and 15 E. Laybach.

LITHUANIA, a country of Europe. It was formerly governed by its own dukes, who were frequently at war with their neighbours, the Poles and Ruſſians. Ringold, who lived in the 13th century, was the firſt who took upon himſelf the title of Great duke of Lithuania; and Wolſtinik was the laſt of the ancient ducal family. Towards the cloſe of the 13th century, Vitenes, a Samogitian, was promoted to the dignity of great duke. Jagello, Vitenes's great grandſon, in order to accompliſh his deſired marriage with Hedwig, the dowager of Louis, king of Poland and Hungary, who had been crowned queen of thoſe kingdoms, promiſed that he and all his ſubjects would embrace the Chriſtian religion, that Lithuania ſhould be united to Poland, and that he would recover the countries which had been diſmembered from the kingdom. Theſe advantageous offers pleaſed the Poles ſo well, that the great duke of Lithuania was invited into the kingdom by a ſolemn embaſſy, and arrived at Cracow in 1386, where he was baptiſed by the name of Uladiſlaus; and after he had eſpouſed the queen, was advanced to the throne. In the following year he made a progreſs into Lithuania, where he aboliſhed the old ſuperſtitious rites and cuſtoms; prevailed on many thouſands to embrace Chriſtianity; founded the epiſcopal ſee of Wilna; and ſettled the eccleſiaſtical ceremonies and diſcipline. In the year 1392, Jagello created his couſin Alexander, or Vitold, great duke of Lithuania; but without prejudice to the union with the kingdom of Poland; the ſovereignty, or ſupreme authority, being lodged in the king. In 1401, the union of Lithuania with Poland was ratified in the diet at Wilna, by a formal inſtrument. In 1413, in a diet held at Hrodlo, the Lithuanians were placed on an equality with the Poles, with regard to public employments, and the protection of the laws; and ſeveral Lithuanian families were regiſtered among the Poliſh nobility. In the year 1499, the union, concluded with the Lithuanians in 1413, was renewed with this additional clauſe, that the Lithuanians ſhould not elect a great duke without the previous knowledge of the Poles; and that the latter ſhould not chooſe a king without the concurrence of the Lithuanians. In a diet held at Lublin, in the year 1569, it was agreed between the Poles and Lithuanians, that the great duchy of Lithuania and kingdom of Poland ſhould be for the future ſo united as to form but one ſtate, under one prince; that the ſovereign ſhould be elected in Poland, by both nations, and that the general diet ſhould be always held at Warſaw. By the acts of 1673, 1677, and 1685, it was decreed, that every third general diet ſhould be held at Grodno, in Lithuania, except the diets of the convocation, election, and coronation. In the year 1697, the Poliſh and Lithuanian laws were reduced to a conformity with each other. This country, which is called Litwa, was formerly very woody, and the greateſt part of it lay uncultivated. But by the tranquillity it enjoyed under Sigiſmund I. and his ſucceſſors, Lithuania was greatly improved by cutting down the woods, and agriculture was duly encouraged. Great quantities of pot-aſh, and wood-aſhes are made here; and the country produces a great deal of corn. Here is alſo great plenty of honey, with which are made liquors called Lippitz, Mallinieck, and Mead. The meadows and paſtures in this province are very fertile, and afford nouriſhment to numerous flocks and herds. The ſheep yield fleeces of very fine wool. Here are alſo ſeveral lakes, in which are profitable fiſheries. In the foreſts of Lithuania are bears, wolves, wild boars, buffaloes, deer, and prodigious flights of wood-cocks. But, notwithſtanding the ſoil is ſo fertile, agriculture is extremely neglected, and the fineſt ſpots of land in the country lie waſte. The luxuriant paſtures in the meadows lie neglected till the graſs rots on the ground; and for want of care, the woods in Lithuania are often conſumed by accidental fires. All ſorts of proviſions are ſold at a very low rate; but caſh is ſo ſcarce, that ten per cent. is the common intereſt for money in this country. All the common people, excepting the burghers of the royal towns, and the Germans, are vaſſals. The nobility are very numerous, and for the moſt part indigent and poor; and thoſe who are in low circumſtances ſerve the richer ſort as pages, valets, treaſurers, ſtewards, &c. Thoſe noble families who are in a better condition, endeavour to mend their fortunes by farming a large eſtate. There is ſcarcely a nobleman of any tolerable circumſtances in Lithuania without a title, which they are all very fond of; and theſe titles deſcend to their children. The principal nobility are exceedingly rich, and have eſtates equal to the revenues of ſome princes; ſo they generally retain ſome hundreds of the poor nobility in their ſervice. They are alſo inveſted with the higheſt poſts in the kingdom, and live in great pomp and ſplendour; but with ſo little economy, that their expences generally exceed their income. Lithuania is, or rather was divided into nine palatinates, which, according to precedency, are in the following order, viz. Wilna, Troki, Polocz, Novogrodeck, Witepſk, Brzeſk, Mſcziſlaw, Minſk, and Livonia. The palatinates of Wilna and Troki conſtitute Proper Lithuania, called by the Poles Litwa Sama, and the ſix following are now annexed to Ruſſia. Beſides theſe palatinates, Lithuania alſo included the principality of Samogitia, called, in the Poliſh language, Zmuydz, or Xuſtwo, Zmudſkie, and the duchy of Courland, which was a fief of Poland. Pruſſian Lithuania, or Little Lithuania, is about 100 miles in length, and 50 in breadth. This country was anciently over-run with thickets and woods; and in the year 1710, it was almoſt depopulated by a peſtilence. In 1720, king Frederick William, at the expence of five millions of rix-dollars, induced 20,000 Switzers, French Proteſtants, Palatines, and Franconians to ſettle in this country; and in 1732, 350,000 dollars were alſo diſtributed among a freſh colony of 12,500 Saltzburghers. By the ſkill and induſtry of the emigrants, this deſolate country has been extremely well cultivated. The ſuperfluous woods have been rooted up, the moraſſes drained, and a great number of towns, villages, farm-houſes, and churches built; ſo that in a few years the country has put on quite a new appearance, and now makes ample returns for the money which his Pruſſian majeſty laid out upon it. The richneſs of the paſtures, the many thouſand laſts of corn, which are either laid up in the king's granaries, or exported; the fine horned cattle, excellent horſes, and numerous flocks of ſheep, with the excellent butter, cheeſe, &c. which this country affords, are inconteſtable proofs of its uncommon fertility. It likewiſe abounds with wood for fuel, and has plenty of fiſh and game. Several manufactures are alſo eſtabliſhed here; particularly for coarſe and fine cloth, leather, &c. The ancient inhabitants of this country have a peculiar language, into which the bible, and ſome books of devotion have lately been tranſlated. The Lithuanians are by no means ſo ſimple and ſtupid as they are generally repreſented; but they have their good and ill qualities like other nations. Among the coloniſts, the Switzers are moſtly employed in grazing and breeding cattle; the French are very well verſed in trade, and ſkilful in the cultivation of tobacco, which they have introduced into this country; and the Saltzburgers are remarkable for their ſkill in agriculture. The Switzers, French, and Franconians are all Calviniſts; ſo that there are ten German and French reformed pariſhes, as they are called, in Little Lithuania. The reſt are Lutherans, with a very few Papiſts among them. The principal towns are Memel, Tilſit, Ragnit, and Inſterburg.

LITIZ, a Moravian town of United America, in the ſtate of Pennſylvania: 8 miles from Lancaſter, and 70 W. Philadelphia.

LIVERPOOL, or Leverpool, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Lancaſter, ſituated on the eaſt ſide of the Merſey, not far from its mouth, in the Iriſh Sea, and one of the moſt commercial and flouriſhing ports of the kingdom, being ſecond to London, and it is ſaid ſuperior to Briſtol. The inhabitants trade to all parts of the world, except Turkey and the Eaſt Indies. The harbour is artificial, but capable of receiving veſſels of any burden up to the town; there are ſeveral public docks for the reception of ſhips, where a thouſand may lie in the greateſt ſafety, all bound by quays, a mile and a half in length, with room for 20,000 ton of ſhipping. The entrance of the river is dangerous, though every means is uſed to render it more ſecure. In the middle of the 16th century, Liverpool was a ſmall place, with only one church, which was a chapel of eaſe to Walton. In the year 1699, an act paſſed to make the town a diſtinct pariſh, and erect a new church, ſince which time it has been gradually advancing in population and trade. It was, however, before that time a corporate town, and ſent members to parliament. In the year 1565, there were only 138 houſe-holders and cottagers. At this time, the number of houſes is, probably, near 10,000, and of the inhabitants 60,000. The trade of Liverpool is general; but the principal branch is the African and Weſt Indian trade. The American, Baltic, and Portugal commerce is alſo very great, as well as to Ireland; ſeveral ſhips are ſent annually to Greenland, and many veſſels are employed in the country trade for corn, cheeſe, coals, &c. ſo that near 3000 veſſels are cleared out from this port in one year. Here are ſeveral manufactories for china-ware and pottery, ſome ſalt-works, glaſs-houſes, and upwards of fifty breweries, from ſome of which large quantities of malt-liquor are ſent abroad. By the late inland navigation, Liverpool has communication with the rivers Dee, Ribble, Ouſe, Trent, Darwent, Severn, Humber, Thames, Avon, &c. which navigation, including its windings, extends above 500 miles, in the counties of Lincoln, Nottingham, York, Weſtmoreland, Cheſter, Stafford, Warwick, Leiceſter, Oxford, Worceſter, &c. The Merſey, upon which this town is ſituated, abounds with ſalmon, cod, flounders, turbot, plaiſe, and ſmelts; and, at full ſea, it is above two miles over. The Merſey is properly an arm of the ſea, and ſubject to the variations of the tide. Liverpool contains ten churches, beſides places of worſhip for the religious of other perſuaſions, an exchange, a cuſtom-houſe, a public infirmary, a priſon, built on the plan of the humane Mr. Howard, an obſervatory, a theatre, &c. The markets are on Wedneſday and Saturday, and every other Wedneſday for all ſorts of cattle: 20 miles N. Cheſter, and 203 NW. London. Long. 2. 58. W. London. Lat. 53. 23. N.

LIVOGNE, a town of Piedmont, in the duchy of Aoſta: 7 miles W. Aoſta.

LIVONIA (Duchy of), a province of Ruſſia.. The ancient hiſtory of the duchy is very dark and obſcure. Paganiſm prevailed here down to the 12th century, when, by the following accident, the Chriſtian religion was firſt introduced into Livonia, properly ſo called:—In the year 1158, ſome merchants of Bremen, bound to Wiſby, in Gothland, were driven by ſtreſs of weather on the coaſt of Livonia, and landed at the mouth of the river Duna, near the Baltic. The inhabitants of thoſe parts, who called themſelves Liven, were at firſt for oppoſing their landing; but becoming more tractable by degrees, they trafficked together. Theſe beginnings the Brememers improved by reſorting hither in greater numbers with commodities to trade with the natives; and with the conſent of the inhabitants, went about two leagues up the Duna, where they pitched their tents. After this, they built a ſtrong warehouſe of timber, on an eminence, in which they depoſited their goods. The German coloniſts, increaſed in number, brought with them, probably about the year 1186, an eccleſiaſtic, of the name of Meinhard, who was an Auguſtine monk, of the convent of Segeberg, in Wagria. This monk, having learned the language of the country, perſuaded ſome of the inhabitants to be baptized. From this time, ſeveral German families came and ſettled in Livonia. About the ſame æra, namely, 1196, Canute VI. king of Denmark, made an expedition into Eſthonia; and having ſubdued that province, he introduced Chriſtianity, erected churches in the country, and ſent prieſts to officiate in them. Towards the middle of the 16th century, the czar Iwan Baſilowitz formed the deſign of conquering this country; which induced the city of Revel and the duchy of Eſthonia to put themſelves under the protection of Sweden: and on this was grounded the claim of that crown to Livonia, and the ſuperior privileges which Eſthonia enjoyed beyond Livonia. Gotha Ketler, who was chief of the order, gave up Livonia to the king of Poland, as great duke of Lithuania, upon which it was annexed to that crown; ſolemnly reſigned his command, and, in 1561, was created the firſt duke of Courland, but was to hold this duchy as a fief of Poland. The Poles alſo got poſſeſſion of Riga and Lettonia; and now this country became the cauſe, as well as the diſmal ſcene, of very bloody wars betwixt Ruſſia, Sweden, and Poland, for a whole century; namely, from the year 1561 to 1660. By the peace of Oliva, which was concluded in 1660, Livonia was given up by Poland to Sweden; and the Duna was agreed on as the boundary betwixt the Swediſh and Poliſh dominions. In 1681, the decrees of the diet, held at Stockholm, in 1680, concerning the re-aſſumption of alienated crown lands, began to be put in execution here; which was an extreme grievance to the nobility. In the famous northern war, which broke out in the beginning of the preſent 18th century, this country was miſerably ravaged; till at laſt, by the treaty of Nyſtadt, concluded in the year 1721, Sweden agreed to cede Livonia for ever to Ruſſia. Livonia conſiſts partly of woods and moraſſes, and partly of a fertile ſoil, which yields the inhabitants all the neceſſaries of life, in great plenty. The air is clear and ſalubrious; and though the winter be long and ſevere, and the ſummer, conſequently, but ſhort; yet the heat of the climate during the latter ſeaſon is ſuch, that the grain ſown both in ſummer and winter ripens at the proper time. In a plentiful year, when the crops have not failed, the inhabitants export many thouſand laſts of rye and barley to Holland, Spain, and other foreign countries: hence Livonia is called the granary of the north. Before the corn is threſhed, it is dried and hardened in kilns, heated by large ſtoves or ovens, which are built contiguous to their barns; however, this does not render it unfit for ſowing, or for making bread and malt; beſides, it keeps the better for it. The horned cattle, horſes, and goats, of this country, are very numerous, and much eſteemed; but the ſheep are not extraordinary, their wool being coarſe, and reſembling goat's hair. Vaſt quantities of flax, hemp, lin-ſeed, leather, and ſkins, are exported from hence. It is now called The Government of Riga, from the capital.

LIVORNO, ſee Leghorn.

LOANDA, or St. Paul de Loanda, an iſland in the Atlantic, near the coaſt of Angola, about 6 leagues in length, and half a league wide, divided from the continent by a narrow channel, which forms a good harbour. The ſoil is unfruitful for grain; but fruits, ſuch as oranges, figs, citrons, &c. abound. It contains ſeven or eight villages. On the coaſt are found ſhell-fiſh, called zimbi, uſed for money by the natives, like cowries in the Indies.

LOANDA, or St. Paul de Loanda, a ſea-port town of Africa, in the kingdom of Angola, and capital of a fertile province, called Loanda, in poſſeſſion of the Portugueſe. The ſee of a biſhop, and containing ſeveral churches, convents, and about 5000 inhabitants, of which only 1000 are whites, the reſt are blacks or mulattoes. The country abounds in cattle and ſheep: Indian corn, millet, manioe, and fruits. Long. 31. E. Ferro. Lat. 8. 45. S.

LOANGO, a country of Africa, ſituated on the weſt coaſt, towards the Atlantic, or Ethiopian Sea, and bounded on the north by Benin, on the eaſt by Anziko, and on the ſouth by Congo. The climate of this kingdom is nearly as hot as any under the torrid zone, and much hotter than thoſe of Congo and Angola; nevertheleſs, we do not find but it is as healthy and pleaſant, and its ſoil as fertile and capable of improvement as any of them, were not the natives, like all the reſt along theſe coaſts, naturally lazy, and too averſe to the fatigues of agriculture, to plant or ſow more than will barely ſuffice the current wants of each year, whence it frequently happens, that a bad ſeaſon is followed by a famine, for want of leaving up a proper ſtore againſt ſuch times. They commonly content themſelves with bread and fiſh, and ſuch fruits, greens, and pulſe, as the ground naturally produces. They have ſeveral ſorts of peas and beans, large and ſmall millet, of all which the ground yields them three crops in the year. Their palm, banana, and other trees, produce excellent fruits, of which they make agreeable wines, which they prefer to thoſe that come from Europe. The cotton and pimento trees grow wild, as well as the paradiſe grain, though the laſt not in ſuch quantities. The enzanda, alicandi, and metamba, afford them plenty of materials for clothing and other uſes, as building and covering their houſes, and making their ſhips and ſmaller veſſels. Sugar-canes, caſſia, and tobacco, grow here plentifully; but the cocoas, oranges, and lemons, are not ſo regarded and cultivated by the inhabitants. They have a great variety of roots, herbs, fruits, grain, and other vegetables, which they make bread of, or uſe for food. They have but few cattle of any ſort, except goats. The oxen, which have been brought hither from other parts, died ſo faſt, that the dealers were diſcouraged from all farther attempts of that kind; hogs they have in great plenty, and poultry is ſo very cheap that ſix penny worth of beads will purchaſe thirty of them. Pheaſants, partridges, and other wild fowl are ſtill in greater abundance, and hardly bear any price. Among wild beaſts, they have the zebra, and multitudes of elephants, whoſe teeth they exchange with the Europeans for iron. The natives, who are called bramas, are tall, ſtout, well-ſhaped, and well-behaved, though formerly wild and inhuman cannibals. They uſe circumciſion, and trade chiefly among themſelves. They are induſtrious and vigilant, where gain is to be obtained, yet friendly and generous to one another; very fond of their palm-wine, yet deſpiſing that of the grape. They are libidinous to a high degree, and very jealous of their wives. They carry on a variety of trades and handicrafts, in the various capacities of weavers, ſmiths, carpenters, bed-makers, potters, canoe-makers, fiſhermen, beſides traders and merchants; the misfortune is, that the handicraftſmen are ſo fond of their old ways, and their tools ſo clumſy and ill contrived, that their work is very tedious and ill-performed. Their dreſs is moſt commonly of their own manufacture, chiefly of cloth, made either of the leaves of the palm, or ſome other tree of the like nature. The young palm-ſhoots are firſt carefully cropped and dried, then ſoaked and ſoftened in palm-wine, and well rubbed with the hand. Theſe, being ſpun and woven, are made into ſuits for the better ſort, which hang round the body, from the girdle down to the feet. All their various garments are tied about the middle with a rich girdle, going ſeveral times about the body, and ſome of them curiouſly wrought, of the ſame materials with their richeſt clothes. Thoſe of the better ſort wear two of thoſe girdles, one above the other, richly adorned and variegated. They wear about their necks, wriſts, and legs, ſeveral rounds of beads of coral, ivory, round ſhells of a beautiful hue, chains of copper, tin, or iron, of a triangular faſhion, brought from Europe. The women's dreſs is much like that of the men, excepting that they wear no girdle, and that their petticoats hang no lower than the knee: thoſe of the richer ſort will throw over it a piece of ſome fine European ſtuff or linen. The head and upper parts of the body are naked, as well as their legs, except that they have collars, bracelets of coral, and other trinkets about their necks, arms, and legs. They allow polygamy: a great man has generally ten, twelve, or more wives, and the pooreſt ſeldom leſs than two or three. The conſent of the parents, and paying down the price agreed on for the wife, is all the formality and courtſhip that is uſed in their marriages. None of the Loangoeſe have any tolerable notion of a Supreme Being. They ſeem, indeed, to acknowledge one, under the name of Sambian Pongo, but neither pay any adoration to him, nor appear to have any idea of his nature or attributes, and, conſequently, neither love, nor pray to him. All their worſhip and invocations are directed to their demons, both domeſtic and rural, to whom they aſcribe the ſole power of bleſſing or of curſing them, of directing the winds, rains, ſtorms, or fine weather, fruitful or unfruitful, healthy or ſickly ſeaſons. The Loangoeſe entertain various notions concerning the nature of the human ſoul, but all of them very extravagant, and bordering on the metempſychoſis. Though their monarchs only ſtyle themſelves mani, or lords of Loango, their ſubjects not only give them the title of mokiſſos, but imagine them to be endowed with a kind of ſupernatural and unlimited power. He can, according to them, not only enrich and impoveriſh his ſubjects by one ſingle word, raiſe deſtructive wars in the provinces, and ſend myriads of people to their graves; but, what is ſtill more extraordinary, he can bring down or withhold rains and ſtorms at his pleaſure. The engangas, or prieſts of this country, all take the title of mokiſſo; but are diſtinguiſhed by the names of the mokiſſo, altar, or temple, which they ſerve, or, more properly, from the village in which they ſtand; as Ganga Therico, Ganga-Baeſi-batta, Ganga-Kikokoo, &c. The commerce of this country conſiſts chiefly in ſlaves. They likewiſe ſell great quantities of ivory, tin, lead, iron, and copper, which they fetch as far as from the mines of Sundi, that lie on the road to Pombo, almoſt adjoining to the Abyſſinian empire. The ſmiths and artiſts in mines go hence, in the month of September, for the kingdom of Sundi, and being arrived at the mountains where the copper mines are, ſet their ſlaves to work in them. They melt the ore on the ſpot; but as they have not the art of purifying it from other metals, which will intermix with it, even within the bowels of the earth, their copper is neither pure nor valuable. The Europeans have, ſince the laſt century, ſent ſome good artiſts to teach them how to refine it, but the natives are either ſo indocile or indolent, that they have not reaped any great advantage from their inſtructions. They are employed at that work until the month of May, at which time they bring with their copper great quantities of elephants' teeth, but of a ſmaller ſize, and elephants' tails, which the Portugueſe convey to Loanda San Paulo, where the negroes of that town have the art of weaving that hair into bracelets, collars, girdles, and other ornaments, exceedingly neat and beautiful. Loango was formerly part of the kingdom of Congo, but the mani, or governors of its ſeveral provinces, revolted from it, and erected themſelves into independent principalities, till one of them grew rich and powerful enough to ſubdue all the reſt, and not only to aſſume the royal title and dignity, but to ſtrip his old maſter of ſeveral others of his provinces, and to make himſelf ſo abſolute in his new kingdom, as to be in ſome meaſure worſhipped as a god by his ſubjects. They give him the name, or title, of Sambo Pongo, which is that of the deity, and addreſs him either for rain or fruitful ſeaſons, with even greater ſolemnity than other nations uſe towards their gods. The kingdom is divided into four principal provinces, viz. Lovangiri, Lovango-mongo, Kilongo, and Piri. Lovangiri is watered by abundance of ſmall rivers, very fertile and well-inhabited. The natives apply themſelves chiefly to the cultivation of their grounds, except a ſmall part employed in the weaving of cloth and linen. Loango-mongo lies north-eaſt of Loangiri, and is ſpacious and fertile, particularly in palm-trees, the oil of which is extracted here in great quantities. The inhabitants are employed in weaving variety of linen and cloth, peculiar to thoſe parts. Kilongo, or Cy-longo, or, as others call it, Chylongo, is a maritime province, and the largeſt and moſt populous of all the four. It is ſituate between the rivers of Quila on the ſouth, and Combi on the north, which laſt divides it from Mayamba, once a ſmall kingdom of itſelf, but now a conquered province of this. Its plains are ſpacious and fertile, and ſheltered at a diſtance by ridges of high mountains. Its inhabitants carry on a very conſiderable commerce, eſpecially of elephants' teeth, though in other reſpects they are extremely rude and unpoliſhed. The laſt province is Piri, which lies north of Kilongo and Loango-mango: It is low and flat, yet abounds with variety of fruit and other trees, and is well peopled and cultivated. The inhabitants are naturally peaceable, and ſcarcely know what war is. They have plenty of cattle and fowl, both wild and tame, and delight much in hunting. The game they take, joined to the milk of their cattle, conſtitute their chief food. There are abundance of towns and villages in all thoſe provinces, concerning moſt of which we know little elſe but their names. Some authors have included the provinces of Mayamba, Sette, and ſome others as far north as Cape Lopez de Gonſalvo, in the dominion of Loango.

LOANGO, a town of Africa, and capital of the country ſo named, ſituated on a river, which forms a bay at its mouth, about two leagues from the coaſt of the Atlantic. It is called Loango, or Lovango, and Banza Loangiri, but by the natives Borai or Boori, and is very airy and ſpacious, as the houſes are not contiguous to each other. The ſtreets are wide, and kept very clean, and the ſides lined with palm-trees, bananas, and bacavas, which afford a grateful ſhelter to the houſes before, and moſt of thoſe of the better ſort have the ſame behind, or even quite round, by way of ornament. In the centre of the city, facing the royal palace, is a great ſquare, and the palace itſelf, which forms another ſquare, a mile and a half in compaſs, is ſurrounded with a paliſado of ſtately palm-trees. It conſiſts of a vaſt number of houſes, among which are thoſe of the king's women, which are large enough to lodge ſeven or eight of them together, and are about ten in number. The houſes of the king, his halls of audience, and other offices, are on the weſt ſide, facing the plain area above mentioned, in which laſt he holds his councils of war; and there alſo feaſts his prime officers, and ſometimes his whole army. From this plain likewiſe, there runs a wide ſtreet, ſome muſket ſhots from the place where there is a conſiderable market kept every day, which begins at ten o'clock, and where there are ſold great quantities and variety of palm-cloth, as alſo proviſions, as meal, poultry, fiſh, wine, corn, and oil. In this market-place is a famous temple and mokiſſo, or idol, called Mokiſſo a Loango, which was held in great veneration both by the kings and people; as to the other houſes of this metropolis, they are for the moſt part oblong, and covered in ſuch a manner, as that the middle part of the top is flat, much after the Italian manner. They have uſually three or four rooms, but no ſtories upon one another. Every houſe is fenced round with a hedge of palm-twigs, canes, or bulruſhes. The furniture of their houſes conſiſts in variety of pots and kettles, calibaſhes, baſkets, mats and benches, on which they lay their clothes, weapons and other utenſils. The bay of Loango, though reckoned pretty good, is incommoded neverthelefs, by a bank on the north ſide of its mouth or entrance, which runs about half a league along the coaſt, and hath not above two fathoms and a half of water. The many large rivers that come down from the continent, occaſion ſuch ſtrong and rapid currents towards the north during almoſt the whole year, that it is very difficult to weather them, and gain a ſouthern courſe. The only months in which they may be ſtemmed with ſafety and eaſe, are January, February, March, and April; all the reſt of the year the currents flow ſo ſtrong, that even coaſters muſt keep at leaſt 01 or 12 leagues off the land. Long. 31. 40. LODI, a city of Italy, in the duchy of Milan, and capital of a diſtrict, called the Lodeſan, ſituated on the Adda. An old city of this name, in the Paveſe, on the Silaro, being deſtroyed by the Milaneſe, the preſent town was built by the emperor Frederic Barbaroſſa, 3 miles from its former ſituation, on the Adda, in the beginning of the 12th century. It is the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Milan, and contains, beſides the cathedral, 2 collegiate, and 17 pariſh churches, and 26 convents. Lodi ſuffered very conſiderably in the diſputes between the Guelphs and Gibelins, as well as in the wars with the French. After the French were driven out of Italy, it became ſubject to Spain, from whom it came, with the reſt of the Milaneſe, to the houſe of Auſtria. It is a place of little trade or manufactures, excepting the article of cheeſe, and a beautiful kind of earthen ware, reſembling China. It is ſurrounded with walls, and well built. The number of inhabitants is ſuppoſed to be between 11 and 12,000: 18 miles SE. Milan, and 76 ENE. Turin. Long. 27. 2. E. Ferro. Lat. 45. 18. N.—On the 11th of May, 1796, this town was taken by the troops of the French republic, commanded by Maſſena, Angereau, and Buonaparte. The republicans attacked the Auſtrians in order to force the bridge, and croſs the river Adda, near this town; the bridge was defended by 30,000 Auſtrians, horſe and foot, and 30 pieces of cannon, within muſket ſhot of the bridge; notwithſtanding which, the republicans, under general Buonaparte, forced their way with fixed bayonets, putting the Auſtrians to death at the ſides of their cannon. The loſs on both ſides muſt have been very great; but ſuch a trait of heroiſm on the part of the French, in this one affair, is not to be equalled. It is ſaid, that the heaps of dead bodies on the bridge for a time impeded their progreſs.

LODI VECCHIO, a town of Italy, in the Lodeſan, on the Silaro. This town was anciently known under the name of Laus Pompeij, or Laus Pompeia, and its flouriſhing ſtate was ſuch, that it inſtigated the Milaneſe to deſtroy it through jealouſy, and moſt of the inhabitants were driven away. LOHEIA, a town of Arabia, in the province of Yemen, on the coaſt of the Red Sea, founded near the tomb of an Arabian ſaint, about three centuries paſt. The territory near it is dry and barren. The harbour is ſo indifferent, that even the ſmalleſt veſſels are obliged to anchor at a great diſtance from the city; and when the tide is at ebb, laden boats cannot approach near it. Notwithſtanding this diſadvantage, a conſiderable trade in coffee is carried on from Loheia; the coffee is brought from the neighbouring hills, and expoſed in one large heap for ſale. This coffee is not reputed to be ſo good as that which comes from Beit el Fakih, and is ſhipped at Mokha and Hodeida. But coffee is to be purchaſed here upon more reaſonable terms, and the carriage to Jidda coſts leſs. On this account ſeveral merchants from Cairo live at Loheia, and others come annually hither to make purchaſes of coffee. Loheia, although without walls, is not entirely defenceleſs. Twelve towers, guarded by ſoldiers, ſtand at equal diſtance round it. Only one of theſe towers, and that newly built by Emir Farhan, is ſuch as to admit of being defended by cannon. Several of the houſes in Loheia are built of ſtone; but the greateſt part are huts conſtructed in that faſhion which is common among the Arabs. The walls are of mud mixed with dung; and the roof is thatched with a ſort of graſs. The water at Loheia is very bad, and is brought from a diſtance. Within 2 leagues of the city is a ſmall hill, which affords conſiderable quantities of mineral ſalt: 125 leagues SSW. Mecca. Long. 42. 49. E. Greenwich. Lat. 15. 42. N.

LONATO, or Lonado, a town of Italy, in the Breſſan, belonging to the ſtate of Venice: 12 miles ESE. Breſcia.—This town was taken by the French, the latter end of June, 1796. Buonaparte, in the account of the battle of Caſtiglione della Stivera, ſays, 4000 men had inveſted the town of Lonado, in which there were only 1200 French troops. Immediately on his arrival at that place, the Auſtrian commander ſent a meſſenger to demand the ſurrender of the town. Buonaparte's anſwer to the ſummons was, that if the Auſtrian general had the effrontery to take the commander-in-chief of the army of Italy, he had only to advance; that he ought to know, that the republican army was at that place, and that all the general officers belonging to the diviſion ſhould be reſponſibe for the perſonal inſult he had been guilty of towards him, and, that if his diviſion did not, in the ſpace of eight minutes, lay down their arms, he will not ſhow mercy to one of them. This anſwer produced the deſired effect, and the whole column ſurrendered.

LONDON, a city of England, in the county of Middleſex, the metropolis of Great Britain. Camden ſuppoſes, that this city derived the name of London from the Britiſh words Llhwn, a wood, and Donas, a town; by which etymology of the word, London ſignifies a town in a wood, which agrees with the manner in which the Britons formed their towns, by building them in the midſt of woods, and fencing them with trees cut down: but leſt this derivation ſhould not pleaſe, the ſame learned writer gives another, from the Britiſh word Lhong, a ſhip, and Dinos, a city, and then the word London will ſignify a city or harbour for ſhips; and, indeed, it has been ſuppoſed by many learned authors, that, before Cæſar's time, London was the ancient emporium or mart of the Britiſh trade with the Phœnicians, Greeks, and Gauls. London had, however, no buildings either of brick or ſtone, till it was inhabited by the Romans; yet in the year 26, it was very famous for the multitude of its merchants, and the greatneſs of its traffic; and ſoon after, Suetonius, becauſe it was too large to be defended by his little army of 10,000 Romans, abandoned the city to Boadicea, who ſet it on fire, and put all the inhabitants to the ſword. London ſoon recovered from this dreadful cataſtrophe, and, in a few years, increaſed in the number of its inhabitants, its trade, and buildings, and was made a prefecture by the Romans, in imitation of Rome itſelf. The time when the city wall was firſt erected, is very uncertain, ſome authors aſcribing this work to Conſtantine the Great, others to his mother, Helena; and others, again, to Valentinian, about the year

368. This wall was compoſed alternately of layers of flat Roman brick, and rag ſtones, and had many lofty towers. Thoſe on the land ſide were fifteen in number. During the Saxon heptarchy, London was the metropolis of the kingdom of the Eaſt Saxons, governed by a magiſtrate called a portreve, that is, a governor or guardian of a port. In the year 400, Auguſtine the monk introduced Chriſtianity into England, and was made archbiſhop of Canterbury, when he ordained Mellitus biſhop of the Eaſt Saxons, eſtabliſhing the ſee at London, where a church was erected for him by Ethelbert, king of Kent. London frequently ſuffered by fires, and was twice plundered by the Danes; the laſt time, they tranſported an army, in 350 ſhips, up the Thames, and, landing near London, ſoon reduced and plundered it; when, looking upon it as a convenient fortreſs, whence they might at pleaſure invade the kingdom of Weſſex, made it a place of arms, and left in it a conſiderable garriſon; but the wiſe and brave Alfred recovered the city, drove out the invaders, and then not only repaired the wall and towers, but embelliſhed the city with additional buildings. The city having no bridge, the citizens croſſed the Thames by means of ferries; but between the years 993, and 1016, a wooden bridge was erected, in the reign of Ethelred, and, in the laſt mentioned year, Canute, king of Denmark, ſailed up the river, in order to plunder the city; and, finding that he could not paſs the bridge with his ſhips, cauſed a canal to be cut through the marſhes, on the ſouth ſide of the river, by which means, Canute brought his ſhips to the weſt of London bridge, and attacked the city on all ſides. However, the citizens exerting themſelves with extraordinary bravery, he was repulſed with conſiderable loſs, and obliged to raiſe the ſiege. Yet he afterwards renewed it with greater vigour than before, but with no better ſucceſs. At laſt a peace was concluded between king Edmund and Canute, by which the kingdom was divided between them, when Mercia, of which London was the capital, falling to Canute's ſhare, the city ſubmitted to him; and Edmund dying a few months after, Canute became ſole monarch of England. The Londoners ſubmitting to William the Conqueror, he, in the year 1067, granted them his firſt charter, in their own language. In 1077, by a caſual fire, the greateſt part of it was laid in aſhes; and, about two years after, the conqueror cauſed the tower of London to be erected, to keep the citizens in awe. Beſides the firſt charter, William afterwards granted them another, but London obtained one much more extenſive from Henry I. by which the county of Middleſex was added to their juriſdiction, on paying the quit rent of 300l. a-year; with a power of appointing not only a ſheriff, but a juſticiary, from among themſelves. Before the grant of this charter, London ſeems to have been entirely ſubject to the arbitrary will of the king. But the liberties of the citizens being now guarded by ſo ſtrong a fence, they endeavoured to ſecure their cuſtoms, by converting them into written laws; and the ſeveral bodies, profeſſing the arts and myſteries of trade and manufacture, which had hitherto been kept up by preſcription only, were now ſtrengthened, by being formed into eſtabliſhed companies. The king, however, reſerved to himſelf the power of appointing the portreve, or chief officer of the city. Upon the death of Henry I. the citizens aſſiſted king Stephen in his endeavours to obtain the crown, and, in 1135, received him into the city. In the year 1139, the citizens purchaſed of king Stephen, for a hundred marks of ſilver, the right of chooſing their own ſheriffs. King Henry II. granted the citizens a charter, which confirmed their liberties and immunities. The ſecond of September, 1189, the day preceding the coronation of Richard I. ſurnamed Cœur de Lion, was remarkable for a dreadful maſſacre of the Jews in this city. In the year 1197, the citizens purchaſed of king Richard a charter, for 15,000 marks, the conſervancy of the river Thames, with a power of removing wears and other obſtructions. In the year 1207, Henry Fitz-Alwyn took the title of mayor, inſtead of cuſtos and bailiff, under which names he had held that dignity for twenty years ſucceſſively. In the year 1211, the citizens began to encompaſs the wall with a deep ditch, 200 feet wide. About this time, the foreſt of Middleſex being diſforeſted, the citizens obtained an opportunity of purchaſing land, and building houſes upon it, by which the ſuburbs of the city were greatly increaſed, and ſoon enlarged to a conſiderable extent without the walls, though all the ground within them was far from being converted into regular ſtreets. The city was divided into twenty-four wards, under the government of the aldermen; and each ward choſe ſome of the inhabitants as common-council men, who were ſworn into their office; theſe were to be conſulted by the aldermen, and their advice followed, in all public affairs relating to the city. The above regulation was made in the reign of king Edward I. who alſo granted the citizens a charter, by which he confirmed all their ancient privileges. Some years before their receiving this favour, the lord treaſurer ſummoned the mayor, aldermen, and citizens, to attend him in the tower, to give an account how the peace of the city had been kept; but Gregory Rockeſley, the mayor, reſolving not to attend in that quality, laid aſide the enſigns of his office at Barking church, and repaired to the tower as a private gentleman; which was ſo highly reſented by the treaſurer, that he committed him and ſeveral citizens to priſon. This proceeding the king ſo far approved, that, though he diſcharged the mayor, he ſeized the city liberties, and, having appointed a cuſtos of the city, there was no mayor of London for twelve years after. In 1306, ſea-coal beginning to be much uſed in the ſuburbs of London, by brewers, dyers, and others requiring great fires, the nobility and gentry complained to king Edward II. that the air was infected by the noiſome ſmell, and the thick clouds of ſmoke it occaſioned, to the endangering of the health of the inhabitants; upon which a proclamation was iſſued, forbidding it to be uſed: but little regard being paid to it, the king appointed a commiſſion of oyer and terminer, to enquire after thoſe who had acted in open defiance of this injunction. In the year 1327, king Edward III. granted the citizens two charters; by the firſt of which it was ordained, that the mayor ſhall be conſtantly one of the judges of oyer and terminer, for the trial of criminals confined in Newgate, &c. By the ſecond charter, Southwark is granted for the good and benefit of the citizens. The ſame prince, in the year 1354, granted the city the privilege of having gold or ſilver maces carried before the chief magiſtrate, a privilege then peculiar to London. This is the time when, it is ſuppoſed by ſome, that the title of lord was firſt added to that of mayor. In the year 1348, the city was viſited by a moſt terrible peſtilence, which continued to rage till the church-yards were found not capacious enough to receive the bodies. This induced ſeveral perſons to purchaſe ground, to ſupply that defect; and in one of theſe burying grounds, bought by ſir Walter Manny, were interred, the next year, 50,000 perſons: by this dreadful peſtilence, 100,000 perſons are ſaid to have died in this city. In the fifth year of the reign of king Richard II. the city ſuffered greatly by the rebellion of Wat Hilliard, commonly called Wat Tyler. William Walworth, the lord mayor, being ordered to arreſt him, that magiſtrate gave him ſuch a blow on the head with his ſword, that he fell wounded from his horſe, and was ſoon diſpatched. Several writers aſcribe to the action of this day, the addition of a dagger to the arms of the city, in remembrance of the good ſervice done by them, and particularly by the lord mayor. In the year 1392, the city refuſing to lend the king a ſum of money, and ſome of the citizens beating and abuſing a Lombard merchant, for offering to advance the ſum required, the mayor was committed priſoner to Windſor caſtle, and ſeveral of the aldermen and citizens, to other priſons; and, by a commiſſion of enquiry, under the great ſeal, being found guilty, they were fined 3000 marks, and the liberties of the city ſeized; the mayor was degraded from his office, and a cuſtos appointed in his room; the ſheriffs were alſo degraded, and others choſen; and, by the king's precept, ſeventeen perſons were appointed aldermen, during the royal pleaſure. As a farther mortification to the city, the king not only withdrew, with the nobility, to York, but removed the courts of juſtice to that city. However, upon payment of the fine of 3000 marks, all the city liberties were reſtored, except the privilege of chooſing a mayor. In the year 1407, a dreadful plague carried off 30,000 of the inhabitants, whereby corn became ſo cheap, that wheat ſold at 3s. 4d. the quarter. In the reign of Henry V. ſir Henry Barton, the lord mayor, firſt ordered lanterns to be hung out for illuminating the ſtreets by night. In the ſecond year of the reign of Edward IV. a dreadful peſtilence raged in London, which ſwept away an incredible number of people In the beginning of the reign of Henry VII. the ſweating ſickneſs firſt raged in London; of which diſeaſe two lord mayors, and one of the ſheriffs, died within the year. In the year 1500, the plague carried off 20,000 perſons; and, during this reign, the city alſo ſuffered greatly by the oppreſſions of the king's miniſters, Empſon and Dudley. The citizens being extremely exaſperated at the encouragement given to foreigners, a prieſt, named Bell, was perſuaded to preach againſt them at the Spital, and, in a very inflaming ſermon, he incited the people to oppoſe all ſtrangers; this occaſioned frequent quarrels in the ſtreets, for which ſome Engliſhmen were committed to priſon. A rumour aroſe, that, on May-day, all the foreigners would be aſſaſſinated, and ſeveral ſtrangers fled; this coming to the knowledge of the king's council, cardinal Wolſey ſent for the lord mayor and ſeveral of the city council, told them what he had heard, and exhorted them to preſerve peace. One of the aldermen, returning from his ward, obſerved two young men at play in Cheapſide, and many others looking at them. He would have ſent them to the compter, but they were ſoon reſcued, and the cry raiſed of 'Prentices, 'Prentices! Clubs, Clubs! Inſtantly the people aroſe; by eleven o'clock they amounted to ſix or ſeven hundred; and the crowd ſtill increaſing, they reſcued, from Newgate and the Compter, the priſoners committed for abuſing the foreigners; while the mayor and ſheriffs, who were preſent, made proclamation in the king's name; but, inſtead of obeying it, they broke open the houſes of many Frenchmen and other foreigners, and continued plundering them till three in the morning, when, beginning to diſperſe, the mayor and his attendants took 300 of them, and committed them to the ſeveral priſons. On the 4th of May, the lord mayor, the duke of Norfolk, the earl of Surry, and others, ſat upon the trial of the offenders at Guildhall, the duke of Norfolk entering the city with 1300 men. That day ſeveral were indicted, and on the next, 13 were ſentenced to be hanged, drawn, and quartered; for the execution of whom ten gallowſes were ſet up in ſeveral parts of the city, upon wheels, to be removed from ſtreet to ſtreet, and from door to door. On the 7th of May, ſeveral others were found guilty, and received the ſame ſentence as the former, and, ſoon after, were drawn upon hurdles, to the ſtandard in Cheapſide; but when one was executed, and the reſt about to be turned off, a reſpite came, and they were remanded back to priſon. In the year 1551, king Edward VI. gave the city a charter, by which he not only confirmed all its former privileges, but granted the lord mayor, aldermen, and citizens, ſeveral lands and tenements in Southwark, with the manor thereof, and its appurtenances; the aſſize of bread, wine, beer, and ale; a fair for three days; and the offices of coroner, eſcheator, and clerk of the market, which are for ever veſted in the lord mayor and his ſucceſſors. In the reign of queen Elizabeth, the far greater part of this metropolis was contained within the walls; and even in theſe narrow limits were many gardens, which have ſince been converted into lanes, courts, and alleys. The buildings of London were, on the weſt, bounded by the monaſtery of St. Catharine; Eaſt Smithfield was open to Tower-hill. The Minories were built only on the eaſt ſide which fronted the city wall; cattle grazed in Goodman's Fields, and Whitechapel extended but a little beyond the bars, and had no houſes to the north; for Spitalfields, which of themſelves would now compoſe a very large town, were then really fields, ſeparated from each other by hedges and rows of trees. Houndſditch conſiſted only of a row of houſes fronting the city wall, and the little yards and gardens behind them alſo opened into thoſe fields. Biſhopſgate-ſtreet, Norton Falgate, and the ſtreet called Shoreditch, were then, however, built as far as the church; but there were only a few houſes and gardens on each ſide, and no ſtreets or lanes on either hand. Moorfields lay entirely open to the village of Hoxton; and Finſbury Fields, in which were ſeveral windmills, extended to the eaſt ſide of Whitecroſs-ſtreet. Chiſwell-ſtreet was not erected; and St. John's-ſtreet extended by the ſide of the priory of St. John of Jeruſalem, to the monaſtery of Clerkenwell and Cow-croſs, which opened into the fields. But on leaving the city walls, the buildings were much leſs extenſive; for though the village of Holborn was now joined to London, the backs of the houſes, particularly on the north ſide opened into gardens and fields; part of Gray's Inn-lane were the only houſes that extended beyond the main ſtreets, great part of High Holborn had no exiſtence, and St. Giles's was a village contiguous to no part of London. If we turn to the Strand, we alſo find that ſpacious ſtreet had gardens on each ſide, and to the north, fields behind thoſe gardens, except a few houſes, where is now the weſt end of Drury-lane. On the ſouth ſide of the ſtreet, the gardens generally extended to the Thames; though ſome of the nobility had houſes on the back of their gardens, next to the water-ſide. Covent-garden, ſo called from its belonging to the convent at Weſtminſter, extended to St. Martin's-lane, and the field behind it reached to St. Giles's. That lane had few edifices beſides the church, for Covent-garden wall was on one ſide, and a wall, which incloſed the Mews, on the other, and all the upper part was a lane between two hedges, which extended a little to the weſt of the village of St. Giles's. Hedge-lane, now Whitcomb-ſtreet, was between two hedges; the extenſive ſtreet, now called the Hay-market, had a hedge on one ſide, and a few buſhes on the other. Neither Pall Mall, St. James's-ſtreet, Piccadilly, or any of the ſtreets or fine ſquares in that part of the town, were built; and Weſtminſter was a ſmall town on the ſouth weſt, and ſouth ſides of St. James's Park. Lambeth was, at that time, a little village, at a conſiderable diſtance from Southwark, and there were no buildings on the ſouth bank of the Thames, till a row of houſes began oppoſite to White Friars, and extended along the river, with gardens, fields, or groves behind them, till almoſt oppoſite the Steel-yard, where ſeveral ſtreets began: the Borough extended a conſiderable diſtance from the bridge to the ſouth, and the building to the eaſt as far as the Tower. This was the ſtate of this great metropolis, ſo lately as in the reign of queen Elizabeth; and how inconſiderable ſoever it muſt appear, when compared with its preſent dimenſions, yet by order of that queen, a proclamation was publiſhed, by which all perſons were forbidden to build upon new foundations. In the year 1603, 30,578 perſons died of the plague. In the year 1613, the water of the New River, brought from Ware by Sir Hugh Middleton, was let into the lower reſervoir at Iſlington, with great ceremony; the next year Smithfield was firſt paved, and, in 1615, the ſides of the ſtreets of this city, being paved with pebble-ſtones, which had hitherto rendered walking very troubleſome, the inhabitants of the principal ſtreets firſt began to pave their doors with broad free-ſtone and flags. In the year 1625, when king Charles I. aſcended the throne, a moſt dreadful peſtilence raged in London; the fatal effects of this diſtemper had been frequently felt; but it now carried off, within the ſpace of a year, in the city and ſuburbs, 35,417 perſons, beſides thoſe who died of other diſtempers, which, in the whole, amounted to 54,265, ſaid to be one third of the inhabitants. During this unhappy reign, great diſputes aroſe between the king and the city, in relation to ſhip-money, loans, &c. But even in the midſt of theſe diſputes, and while the king was actually oppoſing the liberties of the citizens, he granted them ſeveral charters, by which he confirmed all their former privileges, and added ſome new ones. At length the lord mayor, contrary to an order of parliament, endeavouring by proclamation to raiſe troops for his majeſty, he was committed to the Tower, and ſeveral articles of impeachment being brought againſt him, he was, by the ſentence of the houſe of peers, degraded from the mayoralty, and rendered incapable of bearing any office, or receiving any farther honour. There being, ſome time after, but little proſpect of an agreement between the king and parliament, and the greateſt part of the city being averſe from all thoughts of an accommodation, the common-council paſſed an act for fortifying the city. This act of common-council, being ſoon after confirmed by an order of parliament, upwards of twenty forts were raiſed, all joined by a line of communication, formed by a rampart of earth, which on all ſides ſurrounded the cities of London and Weſtminſter, and the borough of Southwark. This was done at the expence of the city, and the whole was immediately executed with the greateſt alacrity. After this, the city entered heartily into the meaſures of the parliament, though the lord mayor, aldermen, and common-council frequently ſolicited that body to ſettle the peace of the kingdom: but ſoon after the king's death, an order being ſent to the lord mayor and ſheriffs, to proclaim the abolition of monarchy, he refuſed to comply, upon which he was brought to the bar of the houſe of commons, committed priſoner to the Tower for two months, and another mayor choſen in his room. At the inauguration of Cromwell, in 1657, as lord protector, the lord mayor carried the city ſword before him, accompanied by the earl of Warwick, who carried the ſword, and, during the ceremony, ſtood on the right ſide of Cromwell's chair, while the lord mayor ſtood on the left. But after the death of Cromwell, the common-council oppoſing the committee of ſafety, declaring for a free parliament, and refuſing to pay or advance money to the parliament, general Monk was ordered to march, with his army, into the city, and the ſtreets became planted with ſoldiers, when ſeveral of the aldermen, and common-council, were taken into cuſtody, the whole body diſqualified, and a new common-council ordered to be choſen; after which the city gates were broken and cut to pieces, the portculliſes taken down and deſtroyed, and the poſts and chains taken down. After this, the city heartily and zealouſly joined with general Monk, in bringing about the reſtoration. About the beginning of May, 1665, a moſt dreadful plague broke out in this city: the week wherein this diſtemper was firſt diſcovered, it carried off 9 perſons; the week after 3; the next week the number increaſing to 14, and progreſſively to 43, the people were ſtruck with conſternation, and many of them had thoughts of leaving the city: but in the month of June, the number having gradually increaſed to 470 a week, the nobility, gentry, and principal citizens, fled into the country for ſafety. In July, the bill increaſing to 2010, all houſes were ſhut up, the ſtreets deſerted, and ſcarce any thing to be ſeen therein but graſs growing, innumerable fires made to purify the air, coffins, peſt-carts, red croſſes upon doors, with the inſcription of "Lord have mercy upon us!" and poor women in tears, with woeful lamentations, carrying their infants to the grave! and ſcarce any other ſounds to be heard than thoſe inceſſantly repeated from the windows, "Pray for us!" and the diſmal call of "Bring out your dead!" In the month of September, the burials amounted in one week to 6988; but the week after the bill falling to 6544, gave ſome glimmering hopes that this dreadful diſtemper was paſt its criſis: however the mortality increaſed the week following to 7165. After this, the contagion gradually decreaſed, till it pleaſed the Almighty to reſtore this deſolate city to its priſtine ſtate of health, after the direful ravages of this diſtemper had ſwept off 68,596 perſons, which, together with thoſe who died of other diſeaſes, made the bill of mortality for this year amount to 97,306. The above calamity was ſcarcely ceaſed, and thoſe who had fled returned to their houſes, when, on Sunday, the 2d of September, 1666, a dreadful fire broke out at one in the morning, in the houſe of Mr. Farryner, a baker, in Pudding-lane. The houſe containing much bruſh and faggot wood, the fire ſoon got ahead, and furiouſly ſeized on the neighbouring houſes on all ſides, running four ways at once; it continued burning and deſtroying every thing in its way the whole of Monday, Tueſday, and Wedneſday. On Thurſday the flames were extinguiſhed; but that evening the fire burſt out again at the Temple, by the falling of ſome ſparks upon a pile of wooden buildings; but upon blowing up the houſes around it with gunpowder, it was extinguiſhed the next morning. By this dreadful conflagration, were conſumed 400 ſtreets and lanes, 13,200 houſes, the cathedral of St. Paul, 86 pariſh churches, 6 chapels, the Royal Exchange, Blackwell-hall, and the Cuſtom-houſe, ſeveral hoſpitals and libraries, 52 of the companies' halls, and a vaſt number of other ſtately edifices, together with 3 of the city gates, 4 ſtone bridges, and 4 priſons; the loſs of which, with that of the merchandiſe and houſehold furniture, amounted, according to the beſt calculation, to 10,730,500l.: but it is amazing, that in this terrible devaſtation, only ſix perſons loſt their lives by the fire. London, indeed, might have been rebuilt in ſuch a manner, as to have exceeded in beauty all the cities upon earth; two plans were formed by ſir Chriſtopher Wren and ſir John Evelyn, but both rejected. However, it was ordered, by act of parliament, that many of the ſtreets and lanes ſhould be widened, that all the houſes ſhould be built with ſtone or brick, with party walls, and the whole finiſhed within three years: that the ground in ſeveral places ſhould be raiſed, and that a column of braſs or ſtone ſhould be erected on or near the place where the above dreadful fire began; whence aroſe that column called the Monument: but had it been raiſed near the place where the fire ceaſed, and in the centre of the fine circular area propoſed by ſir Chriſtopher Wren, in Fleet-ſtreet, where eight ſtreets would radiate upon it, and where it would be ſeen to terminate the view even from Aldgate and Weſtminſter, it would have enjoyed a ſituation vaſtly more worthy of its beauty, and have appeared to infinitely greater advantage, than in the corner where it is now placed. About the beginning of December, 1683, was a ſevere froſt, which continued till the 5th of February; the Thames being frozen, a great number of ſtreets, with ſhops, were erected upon it. In the year 1687, a dreadful perſecution raging in France againſt the diſtreſſed Proteſtants, 13,500 of them came over and ſettled in this city, and the parts contiguous, particularly in Spitalfields, by which they greatly enriched the city and kingdom, by introducing among us new arts and manufactures. In 1716, by a long dry ſeaſon, the river Thames was reduced ſo low, that by a violent ſtorm of wind at weſt-ſouth-weſt, it was blown ſo dry, during the receſs of the tide, that many thouſand of people paſſed it on foot, both above and below bridge, and walked through moſt of the arches. The year 1733 was rendered memorable by the effectual oppoſition made by the citizens againſt a ſcheme for a general exciſe. The laſt and preſent reign are rendered remarkable by the multitude of magnificent buildings, fine ſtreets, and ſpacious ſquares, that have been added, and ſtill are adding to this metropolis. The incorporated ſocieties of merchants are the Hamburgh company, incorporated by Elizabeth, but ſubſiſting under the name of merchants of the ſtaple and merchants adventurers, as early as Edward I.; the Ruſſia company; the Levant or Turkey company; the Eaſt India company; the Royal African company; the Hudſon's Bay company; the South Sea company: beſides theſe, the Royal Exchange and the London Inſurance companies were incorporated by George I. for the ſecurity of property, for which there are ſeveral other offices eſtabliſhed, but not incorporated. Among the public civil buildings of this metropolis, is the Bank of England, eſtabliſhed by act of parliament, in 1693, and greatly enlarged by additional buildings within the laſt 20 years. Upon the acceſſion of queen Elizabeth, in 1558, the commercial, as well as political, affairs of this country, began to make a much more conſpicuous figure among the nations of Europe. Her firſt care was the protection of the two ſocieties of merchants adventurers and merchants of the ſtaple, long before ſettled in Germany; and by ſeveral wiſe and judicious regulations and reſtrictions, to ſet her foreign and domeſtic trade above the controul of other powers, who, on this occaſion, betrayed evident marks of jealouſy and diſcontent. The queen, however, far from being intimidated, wiſely provided for her own ſecurity againſt future diſaſters, by filling her magazines with ammunition and military and naval ſtores. In the ſecond year of her reign, ſhe cauſed gunpowder to be made in England, which, till this time, had been ſupplied by the German ſteel-yard company: ſhe built a conſiderable number of ſhips of war, forming the moſt important fleet that England had ever ſeen; inſomuch that foreigners ſtyled her "the reſtorer of naval glory, and queen of the northern ſeas." Her wealthieſt merchants alſo, after her example, began to build ſhips with great alacrity; and, on any emergency, readily joined them with the national fleet, which enabled her to ſend out 20,000 fighting men for ſea ſervice. A charter of incorporation had been granted by Philip and Mary, in 1554, to the Ruſſia company, who had in conſequence opened a factory in Moſcow, and completed two or three voyages. To give ſtability to this undertaking, the queen, in 1569, ſent over ſir Thomas Randolph, with diſpatches to the czar, in behalf of this new company, and obtained for them an exemption from all duties, cuſtoms, &c. with leave to tranſport their merchandize into Perſia, and to trade in the fulleſt and moſt ample manner. This propitious reign alſo gave birth to the Eaſt India company. The queen, by being at war with Spain, was prevented from getting ſpices from Liſbon at firſt hand; ſhe, therefore, determined to enter her people directly upon a commerce to the Eaſt Indies. Accordingly, on the 31ſt of December, 1600, ſhe granted a charter to George, earl of Cumberland, and 215 knights, aldermen, and merchants, that, at their own coſts and charges, they might open a trade to the Eaſt Indies, in the country and parts of Aſia, and Africa, to be one body politic and corporate, by the name of The Governor and Company of Merchants of London, trading to the Eaſt Indies. The utmoſt encouragement was alſo given, either ſeparately or collectively, to all Engliſh merchants, who choſe to make adventures abroad, for the improvement of our commerce, and the extenſion of our trade. The Levant or Turkey company were incorporated under a perpetual charter, by the deſignation of the merchants of England, trading to the Levant ſeas. The London and Liverpool merchants, alſo, ſent out ſeveral ſhips to Greenland. In the year 1613, the money paid for exports and imports in London alone, amounted to 109,572l. 18s. 4d. which was very near thrice as much as all the other ports of England paid for cuſtoms in the ſame year. The ſilk manufactures of London were alſo, by this time, become ſo conſiderable, that, in 1629, they were incorporated by Charles I. under the name of The Maſter, Warden, Aſſiſtants, and Commonalty of Silk Throwers, of the city of London, and within four miles of it. From the year 1645, we may date the commencement of private banking, which originated with the Goldſmith's company. In a very ſhort time banking conſtituted a very conſiderable branch of buſineſs. The goldſmiths began to diſcount merchant's bonds and bills, both in town and from the country; and alſo began to receive the rents of gentlemens eſtates remitted to town, and to allow them, and others, who put caſh into their hands, ſome intereſt for it, if it remained only for a ſingle month. The year 1660 gave birth to the Royal Society of London, incorporated by Charles II. The merchants of London trade to all parts of the world, exporting to Turkey woollen clothes, tin, lead, and iron, ſolely in our own ſhipping; and bringing from thence raw ſilk, carpets, galls, and other dying ingredients, cotton, fruits, medicinal drugs, coffee, &c. To Italy, woollen goods of various kinds, peltry, leather, lead, tin, fiſh, and Eaſt India merchandiſe; and bring back raw and thrown ſilk, wines, oil, ſoap, olives, oranges, lemons, pomegranates, dried fruit, colours, anchovies, &c. To Spain, all kinds of woollen goods, leather, lead, tin, fiſh, corn, iron, and braſs manufactures, haberdaſhery-wares, aſſortments of linen from Germany, and elſewhere; and receive in return wines, oils, dried fruits, oranges, lemons, olives, wool, indigo, cochineal, and other dying drugs, colours, gold and ſilver coins, &c. To Portugal, the ſame kind of merchandiſe as to Spain, and make returns in vaſt quantities of wines, oils, ſalt, dried and moiſt fruits, dyer's ingredients, and gold coins. To France, tobacco, lead, tin, flannels, horns, hard-ware, Mancheſter goods, &c. and ſometimes great quantities of corn; and make our returns in wines, brandies, linens, cambrics, lace, velvets, brocades, &c. To Flanders, ſerges, flannels, tin, lead, ſugars, and tobacco; and make returns in fine lace, linen, cambrics, &c. To Germany, cloth and ſtuffs, tin, pewter, ſugars, tobacco, and Eaſt India merchandize: and bring from thence linen, thread, goat-ſkins, tinned plates, timbers for all uſes, wines, and other articles. To Norway, tobacco and woollen ſtuffs; and bring from thence vaſt quantities of deal and other timber. To Sweden, moſt of our home manufactures; and return with iron, timber, tar, copper, &c. To Ruſſia, great quantities of woollen cloths and ſtuffs, tin, lead, tobacco, diamonds, houſehold furniture, &c. and make returns in hemp, flax, linen, thread, furs, pot-aſh, iron, wax, tallow, &c. To Holland, immenſe quantities of different ſorts of merchandiſe, ſuch as all kinds of woollen goods, hides, corn, coals, Eaſt India, and Turkey articles imported by thoſe reſpective companies, tobacco, tar, ſugar, rice, ginger, and other American productions; and return with fine linen, lace, cambrics, thread, tapes, incle, madder, boards, drugs, whalebone, train oil, toys, and various other articles of that country. To America, we ſend our home manufactures of almoſt every kind; and make our returns in tobacco, ſugars, rice, ginger, indigo, drugs, log-wood, timber, &c. To the coaſt of Guinea, they ſend various ſorts of coarſe woollen and linen goods, iron, pewter, braſs and hard-ware manufactures, lead-ſhot, ſwords, knives, fire-arms, gunpowder, glaſs manufactures, &c.: and bring home vaſt numbers of negro ſlaves, gold duſt, dying and medicinal drugs, red-wood, Guinea grains, ivory, &c. To Arabia, Perſia, Eaſt Indies, and China, they ſend much foreign ſilver coin and bullion, manufactures of lead, iron, and braſs, woollen goods, &c.: and bring home muſlins and cottons, of various kinds, calicoes, raw and wrought ſilk, chintzes, teas, porcelain, coffee, ſaltpetre, gold duſt, and many drugs for dyers and medicinal uſes. Theſe are excluſive of our trade to Ireland, Newfoundland, Weſt Indies, and many other of our ſettlements and factories in different parts of the world. The trade to the Eaſt Indies certainly conſtitutes one of the moſt ſtupendous political, as well as commercial machines, that is to be met with in hiſtory. The trade itſelf is excluſive, and lodged in a company, which has a temporary monopoly of it, in conſideration of money advanced to the government. Without entering into the hiſtory of the Eaſt India trade, within theſe twenty years paſt, and the company's concerns in that country, it is ſufficient to ſay, that beſides their ſettlements on the coaſt of India, which they enjoy, under certain reſtrictions, by act of parliament, they have, through the various internal revolutions which have happened at Hindooſtan, and the ambition or avarice of their ſervants and officers, acquired ſuch territorial poſſeſſions, as render them the greateſt commercial body in the world. The city of London is divided into twenty-ſix wards, each of which is under the juriſdiction of an alderman, choſen by the free inhabitants at large, in aſſemblies termed wardmotes; out of theſe aldermen, one is annually elected, on Michaelmas-day, to be the lord mayor, or the ſupreme magiſtrate over the whole city, and who enters on his office the 9th of November following. The lord mayor and citizens of London have the ſheriffalty of London and Middleſex in fee, by charter; and the two ſheriffs are by them annually elected. The recorder, who is a counſellor experienced in the law, is choſen by the lord mayor and alderman, for their inſtruction and aſſiſtance, in matters of juſtice and proceedings according to law. He ſpeaks in the name of the city upon all extraordinary occaſions: reads and preſents their addreſſes to the king; and when ſeated upon the bench, delivers the ſentence of the court. The chamberlain of London is annually choſen by the livery, on Midſummer-day, though he is never diſplaced from his office, unleſs ſome material complaint is alledged againſt him. Beſides theſe officers of truſt, there are ſeveral others, viz. the coroner, the town clerk, the common ſerjeant, the city remembrancer, &c. The number of churches in the city and ſuburbs, in the year 1593, was 113, beſides thoſe in Weſtminſter, and the new ones built by the act of queen Anne. Before the fire, there were ninety-ſeven within the walls, and ſeventeen without. There are now but ſixty-two pariſh churches within the city and liberties. The ſteeples of St. Mary le Bow. St. Bride's, the cathedral of St. Pauls's and the church of St. Stephen, Walbrook, were built by ſir Chriſtopher Wren. The Guildhall was built in the year 1411. Other public buildings are, the Bank, eſtabliſhed by act of parliament, in 1603, and wonderfully beautified and enlarged within the laſt 30 years; the Royal Exchange, firſt built by ſir Thomas Greſham, in the year 1566, and rebuilt after the fire of London. Britiſh Muſeum, Heralds-office, Sion-college, Somerſet-houſe, where now moſt of the public offices are held; College of Phyſicians; two Theatres Royal for winter, and another only open for the ſummer ſeaſon; an Opera houſe, &c. The charitable inſtitutions are numerous, both as ſchools and infirmaries in almoſt every part of the city and ſuburbs. London returns four members to the Britiſh parliament. The number of inhabitants has been variouſly eſtimated at 700,0000 and 800,000, and even ſo high as 1,000,000. A recent publication ſays, "the ſituation of London with reſpect to navigation is peculiarly favourable, being neither too high nor too low. Had it been placed lower down on the river, it would not only have been annoyed by the marſhes, but more liable to inſults from foreign foes; and if it had been higher, it would not have been acceſſible, as it is at preſent, to ſhips of large burden. But its actual poſition is ſuch as to give it every advantage, that can be derived from a ſeaport, without any of its dangers. It alſo enjoys, by means of its noble river, a very extenſive communication with the internal parts of the country, that ſupply it with every ſpecies of the neceſſaries of life, and receive from it, in return, thoſe articles of commerce, which they may reſpectively require." It is plentifully ſupplied with the very great and important article of fuel, by the navigation of its river from the northern collieries, which branch of commerce forms a principal nurſery for ſeamen, independent of foreign trade; and is a very diſtinguiſhed ſource of its naval ſuperiority. With equal eaſe are corn and various other articles conveyed to it from all the maritime ports of the kingdom, as well as from foreign parts, whenever it is found neceſſary, in which great numbers of coaſting veſſels are conſtantly employed, and ſhips in foreign commerce occaſionally exerciſed. The vaſt Eaſt India trade, with thoſe to Turkey, and Hudſon's Bay, are wholly confined to this port. Long. 0. 5. W. Greenwich. Lat. 51. 32. N.

LONDONDERRY, a county of Ireland, in the province of Ulſter, bounded on the north by Lough Foyle and the Atlantic Ocean, on the eaſt by the county of Antrim, on the ſouth-weſt by the county of Tyrone, and on the weſt by Donegal, extending in its greateſt dimenſions 32 miles from north to ſouth, and about the ſame from eaſt to weſt. It contains 31 pariſhes, in which are about 25,000 houſes, and 125,000 inhabitants; this county was formerly called Coleraine, but changed its name in the reign of James I. who granted the principal part of the county, with the towns of Londonderry and Coleraine to the citizens of London, in conſideration of their ſettling an Engliſh colony after the rebellion, in the North of Ireland, under the name of the ſociety of the governors and aſſiſtants at London, of the new plantation of Ulſter, in the realm of Ireland. The linen manufacture proſpers through every part of the county: 8 members are returned to the Iriſh parliament, viz. by the county, the city of Londonderry, Coleraine and Newtown Limavaddy, two each; Londonderry is the capital.

LONDONDERRY, a city and ſeaport of Ireland, and capital of a county of the ſame name. Over the river Foyle, on whoſe verge ſtands the city, is a very handſome wooden bridge, 1068 feet in length, and 40 feet in breadth. The depth of the river, at low water, is 31 feet, and the riſe of the tide is from 8 to 10 feet. The piers of the bridge conſiſt of poſts of oak timber, from 14 to 18 inches ſquare, and from 14 to 58 feet long. The head of each poſt is tenanted into a cap-piece 14 inches ſquare, and 40 feet long, ſupported by three ſets of girths and braces. The piers are 16½ feet diſtant from each other, and are bound together by 13 ſtring-pieces equally divided, and bolted tranſverſely. On the ſtring-pieces is laid the covering, or flooring, of fir plank, 5 inches thick. To each ſide of the platform is affixed a railing 4½ feet high, with inſide railings for foot paſſengers, on which are erected lamp-poſts for 26 lamps. Near the city-ſide of the river is a draw arch, 25 feet wide, on a new and ſimple conſtruction, having all its machinery worked under the floor of the bridge, by which the diſagreeable appearance of a gallows, with counter-balances, chains, &c. is avoided. This curious, but plain and elegant ſtructure (the firſt of the kind introduced into Ireland) was built in thirteen months, at the expence of the corporation, by Meſſrs. Lemuel Cox and Jonathan Thompſon, natives of America, and was opened for foot paſſengers in the latter end of the year 1790. This city was built in the reign of king James I. by the company of London adventurers, and ſurrounded with a ſtrong wall. It has a military governor, who is commander of a fort below the town: there are fonr caſtles by the ſide of the river. The quay and ſome part of the town are without the walls. It is governed by a mayor, aldermen, &c. and is a county of itſelf. The trade is conſiderable, principally to America and the Weſt Indies. In the year 1641, this town made a brave defence againſt the Iriſh rebels; in the year 1649, it ſtood out againſt lord Hards, and in the year 1689, it held out againſt the troops of James II. for ſeven months, under the conduct of a clergyman, of the name of Walker, though they were reduced to the greateſt diſtreſs, for the want of proviſions, till they were relieved by general Kirk: 106 miles NNW. LONG ISLAND, an iſland of America, belonging to the United States, extending eaſt from the city of New York, 140 miles. It is not more than ten miles in breadth on a medium, and is ſeparated from Connecticutt, by Long Iſland Sound. The iſland is divided into three counties: King's, Queen's, and Suffolk. The ſouth ſide of the iſland is flat land, of a light ſandy ſoil, bordered, on the ſea-coaſt, with large tracts of ſalt meadow. This ſoil, however, is well calculated for raiſing grain, eſpecially Indian corn. The north ſide of the iſland is hilly, and of a ſtrong ſoil, adapted to the culture of grain, hay, and fruits. It is remarkable, that on Montank-point, at the eaſt end of the iſland there are no flies. Between this point and Eaſt Hampton is a beach, three quarters of a mile wide, in the centre of which was found, about fifty years ago, under a ſand-hill which was blown up by the wind, the entire ſkeleton of a large whale, nearly half a mile from the water. The ſouth ſide of the iſland is indented with numerous ſtreams of various ſizes, which fall into a large bay, two or three miles over, formed by a beach, about eighty rods wide, which appears like a border to the iſland, extending from the weſt end of it to Southampton. Through this beach, in various places, are inlets of ſuch depth as to admit of veſſels of ſixty or ſeventy tons. There are two whale fiſheries; one from Sagg harbour, which produces about 1000 barrels of oil annually. The other is much ſmaller, and is carried on by the inhabitants in the winter ſeaſon, from the ſouth ſide of the iſland. They commonly catch from three to ſeven whales in a ſeaſon, which produce from twenty-five to forty barrels of oil. This fiſhery was formerly a ſource of conſiderable wealth to the inhabitants, but through a ſcarcity of whales, it has greatly declined of late years. There is a conſiderable trade carried on from Sagg-harbour, whence is exported to the Weſt Indies, and other places, whale oil, pitch-pine boards, horſes, cattle, flax-ſeed, beef, &c. The produce of the middle and weſtern parts of the iſland is carried to New York. The iſland contains 30,863 inhabitants.

Mr. Ray in his Journey through the Low Countries, &c. ſays, "Whilſt we were at the Hague, we took the opportunity of viewing the burial place of a certain lady of Zealand, in the church of Lauſdun, a village of about five or ſix Engliſh miles from the Hague; who as the inſcription tells you, was Margaret the wife of Herman, earl of Henneberg, and daughter of Florentius, earl of Holland and Zeeland, and ſiſter to William, king of the Romans, &c. This lady being about forty years of age, and meeting with a poor woman that had twins in her arms, told her that ſhe muſt have been diſhoneſt to her huſband, as not believing that two children could be got at once ; at which the poor woman, being highly concerned, wiſhed that ſhe might bring forth as many children at a birth as there were days in the year ; which was fulfilled in 1276, when at one birth ſhe was brought to bed of 365 children, of both ſexes, who were baptiſed by Guido, a ſuffragan of Utrecht, in two braſs baſons, the ſons having the name of John, and the daughters that of Elizabeth given them, and ſoon after died, all in one day, as did alſo the mother, and were buried in this church of the village of Lauſdun. This inſcription is to be ſeen in Latin, over the two baſons in which they ſay theſe children were baptized, and beneath it alſo this following diſtich :—

En tibi monſtroſum nimis & memorabile factum,

LORETO, a town of Italy, in the marquiſate of Ancona : ſituated on a hill, about half a league from the Adriatic. It is ſmall but fortified, not of ſtrength ſufficient to ſtand a ſiege. It is the ſee of a biſhop, under the pope. The conſequence of this place ariſes from the Santa Caſa, or Holy Houſe, which it is pretended was the very ſame in which the Virgin Mary lived at Nazareth ; and which, according to the hiſtory of it, was tranſported by angels, in the year 1291, from Galilee to Terſato, in Dalmatia ; from thence, in the year 1294, it was removed to Italy near Recanati : at laſt, after twice again changing its place, it was fixed at Loreto, and is ſituated in the cathedral. This houſe is nearly thirty-two feet long, thirteen feet wide, and eighteen feet nine inches in height, incruſted with marble, with inſide walls of brick, with ſome pieces of ſtone intermixed. Towards the eaſt end, there is a ſeparation made, by the grate work of ſilver : this they call the ſanctuary, and here ſtands the holy image of the virgin, in a nich of ſilver : made as they pretend of cedar of Lebanon, and carved by St. Luke ; ſhe has a triple crown on her head, and holds the image of Chriſt, covered alſo with diamonds ; in her left hand ſhe carries a golden globe, and two fingers of her right hand are held up, as in the act of bleſſing. The other part of the houſe has an altar at the upper end, at the lower a window, through which the angel is ſuppoſed to have entered, at the annunciation. The ſanctuary is perfectly crowded with ſixty-two great lamps of gold and ſilver : one of the golden ones, which was preſented by the republic of Venice, weighs thirty-ſeven pounds, there are alſo angels waiting about the holy image, one of maſſive gold and two of ſilver : and the walls are covered with plates of ſilver. The ſacred bowl, out of which the holy family uſed to eat, is preſerved here. No perſon is permitted ho enter the chapel armed on pain of excommunication. The jewels of the holy houſe are nothing in compariſon with the treaſury ; where the number, variety, and richneſs of the veſtments, lamps, candleſticks, goblets, crowns, crucifixes, images, cameos, pearls, gems of all kinds, &c. is prodigious : 10 miles N. This country forms only a ſmall part of a kingdom, which bore that name, and which extended from Vienne, on the Rhône, to Cologne. It owes its name to Lothaire II. grandſon of Louis le Debonnaire, and after many revolutions it was annexed to France, in the year 1766, at the death of Staniſlaus, the laſt duke. Separated from Bar, it is about 30 leagues in length, and 23 in breadth. The air is thick and cold, but healthy; the plains, watered by divers rivers, are fertile in corn and fruit; the mountains and vallies are covered with wood, which harbour great quantities of game. The country has ſalt ſprings, together with ſome mines of iron, copper, tin, and ſilver. Its lakes abound in fiſh, and in the mountains of the Voſges are found agates, granates, chalcedonies, and other gems, as alſo a particular ſubſtance for making cups and other veſſels. LOUDEAC, a town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the North Coaſts. Here is an iron forge, and a manufacture of thread: 6½ leagues S. St. Brieuc, and 9 SSE. Guingamp.

LOUDOWN, a county of United America, in the ſtate of Virginia.

LOUDUN, a town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Vienne, ſituated on an eminence, between the Creuſe and the Dive: containing about 4000 inhabitants; 9 leagues NNW. Poitiers, and 4 E. Thouars. Long. 17. 45. E. Ferro. Lat. 47. N.

LOUE, a town of France, in the department of the Sarte, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Sillé: 4 leagues S. Sillé le Gillaume, and 5 W. le Mans.

LOVERANO, a town of Italy, in the province of Otranto: 5 miles NNE. Nardo.

LOUGHBOROUGH, a town of England, in the county of Leiceſter, with a weekly market on Thurſday. The principal manufacture is making ſtockings: 11 miles N. Leiceſter, and 109 N. London.

LOUGH AGHREE, a lough of Ireland, in the county of Down, 4 miles ESE. of Dromore. It is in length near a mile, and in breadth about a quarter; and ſtored with excellent trout and eels.

LOUGH ALLEN, a lough of Ireland, in the county of Leitrim, more than 30 miles in circuit, and encompaſſed by high mountains, forming a beautiful and pictureſque ſcene. This diſtrict abounds with coal and iron mines; and iron works have lately been eſtabliſhed in its vicinity.

LOUGH ALLUA, a lough of Ireland, in the county of Cork, within a mile of Inchigeela, and heretofore remarkable for the hermitage of Finbar, ſituated on an iſland in this lake.

LOUGH ARROW, a lough of Ireland, in the county of Sligo, 2 miles from Ballinafad. It has in it a number of iſlands, moſt romantically ſituated, and well planted.

LOUGHBRICKLAND, a town of Ireland, in the county of Down. The name ſignifies the lake of the ſpeckled trout, and it was ſo called from the lake near it, which abounds with that particular ſpecies of fiſh. It conſiſts chiefly of one broad ſtreet, and is a great thoroughfare, being by the great road from Belfaſt to Dublin, from which latter place it is 58 miles.

LOUGH CORRIB, a lough of Ireland, in the county of Galway. It is upwards of 20 miles long, and, in ſome parts, 6 broad, having many very fine iſlands in it. It is remarkable for the Gillaroe trout, a very delicate fiſh, which weighs from 12 to 18 pounds.

LOUGH DERG, a lake of Ireland, in the county of Donegal, from which the river Derg iſſues, which falls into Lough Foyle. In it is the iſland, containing the narrow little cell, called St. Patrick's purgatory.

LOUGH ERIN, a lough of Ireland, in the county of Down, in the pariſh of Anahilt. It is ſo deep, in ſome places, that a line of 16 fathoms has proved inſufficient to ſound it. It is remarkable for breeding pike, trout, and eels of a very great ſize.

LOUGH FOYLE, a lough of Ireland, in the county of Derry. Before the mouth of this lake, or gulf, is a great ſand, called the Touns, which, however, does not obſtruct the navigation, as there are at all times 14 or 15 fathoms water in the channel, which is broad as well as deep. In the entrance of the lough there are ſands both on the right and left; but, between theſe, there is a broad channel, in moſt parts 3 or 4 fathoms deep, and in that arm whereon Londonderry ſtands, it is 10 or 12, ſo that it is eſteemed as good and commodious a harbour as any in the kingdom.

LOUGH KAY, a lough of Ireland, in the county of Leitrim. It is a beautiful piece of water, interſperſed with iſlands, ſome of which exhibit old caſtles and ruins; ſome, lofty timber-trees; and ſome, highly improved, a perpetual verdure, without a ſingle tree.

LOUGH LEE, or Lough Curranſ, a lough of Ireland, in the county of Cork, near the Bay of Ballinaſkeligs. It is of an oval form; 3 miles in length, and about half as broad; containing 3 ſmall iſlands, and abounds with excellent white trout and ſalmon. The country about is mountainous and woody.

LOUGH NEAGH, a lough of Ireland, ſituated in or between the counties of Armagh, Down, Derry, and Antrim. It is the largeſt lake in Europe, thoſe of Ladoga and Onega in Ruſſia, and that of Geneva in Swiſſerland excepted, being 20 miles long, and 15 broad. The area of it is computed to be 100,000 acres. It is remarkable for its healing virtue in ſcrophulous caſes, by bathing; and, for its petrifying quality, which is not only found in the water, but in the adjacent ſoil at a conſiderable depth.

LOUGH REE, a lough of Ireland, between the counties of Longford and Roſcommon; it is a handſome ſpacious lake, formed by the Shannon, and contains ſeveral iſlands.

LOUGH STRANGFORD, a lough of Ireland, in the county of Down, takes its preſent name from a ſmall port town, called Strangford, ſeated on the weſt ſide of the narrow entrance from the ſea; or rather they both take their names from the ſtrong, or rapid current, or tide, which runs here at the rate of 6 or 7 miles an hour. It was formerly known by the name of Lough Cone, or Lough Coyne. It is a deep bay, or inlet of the ſea, about 17 miles long, and 4 or 5 broad, and abounds with excellent fiſh, particularly ſmelts; and off the bar, there is a periodical herring fiſhery in autumn. The bar, or entrance into this lough, is about 3 miles below Strangford. There is a long rock at the entrance, in the middle of the paſſage; but on both ſides of it the channels are broad and deep. Veſſels bound up in the channel put in here, if the wind be unfavourable; but few go up higher than Strangford. It contains 54 iſlands, ſmall and great, known by particular names, and there are many others which are nameleſs. Four of them are called Swan Iſlands, from the number of ſwans which frequent them. The great and profitable manufacture carried on in theſe iſlands, is the burning of ſea-weed into kelp.

LOUGHREA, a town of Ireland, in the county of Galway, near a lake of the ſame name: 15 miles SW. Galway.

LOUGNON, a river of France, which runs into the Saône, near Pontarlier.

LOUHANS, a town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Saône and Loire, ſituated at the conflux of the Seille and Solnan. It is a place of reſort for the merchants of France and Swiſſerland, who meet there for the purpoſe of commerce: 5 leagues SE. Châlons ſur Saône, and 8 NNE. Mâcon. Long. 22. 54. E. Ferro. Lat. 46. 39. N.

LOVIGNANO, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Otranto: 12 miles SSW. Brindiſi.

LOUISA, a ſea-port town of Sweden, in the province of Nyland, on the north coaſt of the Gulf of Finland, built in the year 1745, as a frontier town towards Ruſſia, and at firſt called Degerby, which was changed to Louiſa in the year 1752, by king Adolphus Frederick.

LOUISBURG, a town and capital of the iſland of Cape Breton, ſituated on a point of land on the ſouth-eaſt ſide of the iſland; its ſtreets are regular and broad, conſiſting for the moſt part of ſtone houſes, with a large parade at a little diſtance from the citadel; the inſide of which is a fine ſquare, near 200 feet every way. On its north ſide, while poſſeſſed by the French, ſtood the governor's houſe, and the church; the other ſides were taken up with barracks, bomb-proof; in which the French ſecured their women and children during the ſiege. The town is near half an Engliſh mile in length, and two in circuit. The harbour is more than half an Engliſh mile in breadth, from north-weſt to ſouth-eaſt in the narroweſt part, and ſix miles in length, from north-eaſt to ſouth-weſt. In the north-eaſt part of the harbour is a fine careening wharf to heave down, and very ſecure from all winds. On the oppoſite ſide are the fiſhing ſtages, and room for 2000 boats to cure their fiſh. In winter, the harbour is totally impracticable, being entirely frozen, ſo as to be walked over: that ſeaſon begins here at the cloſe of November, and laſts till May or June: ſometimes the froſts ſet in ſooner, and are more intenſe; as particularly in 1745, when by the middle of October, a great part of the harbour was already frozen. The principal, if not the only trade of Louiſburg, is the cod-fiſhery; the plenty of fiſh being remarkable, and at the ſame time better than any about Newfoundland. The anchorage, or mooring, is good, and ſhips may run a-ground without any danger. Its entrance is not above 300 toiſes in breadth, formed by two ſmall iſlands. Here is plenty of cod, and the fiſhery may, in general, be continued from April to the cloſe of December. It was taken from the French by the Engliſh fleet, under Sir Peter Warren, and our American forces, commanded by Sir William Pepperel, in the year 1745; but afterwards reſtored to France by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, in 1748. It was again taken by the Engliſh, under the command of admiral Boſcawen and lieutenant-general Amherſt, on the 27th of July, 1758, and its fortifications ſince demoliſhed. Long. 59. 50. W. Greenwich. Lat. 45. 55 N.

LOUISIANIA, a country of North America, ſituated between the Miſſiſippi and New Mexico, towards the ſouth it is bounded by the Gulf of Mexico. Its northern boundaries are unknown. This country was firſt diſcovered by Ferdinand de Soto, a Spaniard, in the year 1541, but no ſettlement was attempted till the latter end of the next century. In the year 1682, M. de la Sale, a Frenchman, travelled through it, and returning to France, repreſented the country in ſuch a light to Louis XIV. that a company was eſtabliſhed for the purpoſe of ſettling a colony. The attempt, however, did not ſucceed, and in the year 1763, Louiſiania was ceded to Spain. The ſoil is repreſented as rich and fertile, well watered with rivers abounding in fiſh. The timber plentiful and large, of all kinds that are found under the ſame degrees of latitude. The only two places of note are New Orleans and New Madrid.

LOUISVILLE, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Georgia: 45 miles SW. Auguſta. Long. 82. 42. W. Greenwich. Lat. 32. 55. N.

LOUTH, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinſter, bounded on the north by the county of Armagh, on the eaſt by the Iriſh Sea, on the ſouth by Meath, and on the weſt by Meath and Monaghan. It is the ſmalleſt county of Ireland, being only 22 miles in length from north to ſouth, and from 9 to 14 in breadth from eaſt to weſt. It contains 61 pariſhes, upwards of 11,500 houſes, and about 57,750 ſouls. Except on the ſide of Carlingford Bay, which is mountainous, the ſoil is in general rich and fertile. The principal towns are Drogheda, Carlingford, Dundalk, Ardee, and Dunleer, all of which are borough towns, and return two members each to the Iriſh parliament: the county likewiſe ſends two. Louth, which gives name to the county, is a village: 6 miles from Dundalk.

LOVTZOVA, a town of Ruſſia, in the government of Irkutſk: 10 miles NE. Verchnei Udinſk.

LOUVAIN, or Loeven, a city of Brabant, and heretofore the capital; founded, according to ſome, by Julius Cæſar, according to others, by one Lupus, who lived a long time before him; but on this there can be no reliance. It is, however, certain, that Louvain was known in the year 885, when Godfrey, duke of Normandy, having ravaged the country, encamped near the Dyle, on the plain of Louvain. The emperor, Arnulph, built a caſtle to defend the country againſt the Normans, about this time, which was called Loven, and afterwards le Chateau de Cæſar, or Cæſar's Caſtle, and was a long time the ordinary reſidence of the dukes of Brabant; in this caſtle Henry I. was aſſaſſinated, in the year 1038; Thierry, comte of Holland, was kept priſoner in the year 1200; the emperor, Charles V. and his ſiſters, were brought up to the year 1510; and formerly the aſſembly of the ſtates was held here; it is now in ruins. The city was firſt ſurrounded with walls in the year 1165, and afterwards very much enlarged in the fourteenth century, by Wenceſlaus and John, dukes of Brabant. The trade at preſent is not very conſiderable; the principal article is beer, of which a great quantity is ſent to Bruſſels, Antwerp, Liege, and Tirlemont, and other cities and towns It was formerly much larger than it now is, much richer, and carried on more trade than any other place in the country. At the beginning of the fourteenth century, 4000 houſes were inhabited by clothiers, and their manufactories employed above 150,000 workmen. It is related in their annals, that when this crowd of weavers left work, they were compelled to ſound a large bell, that the women might keep the children within doors, leſt they ſhould be thrown down and trampled to death. This is probably the reaſon that the magiſtrates are here more numerous than in other cities, for beſides two burgomaſters, ſeven echevins, two penſioners, ſix ſecretaries, and four receivers; they have a council of 21, 11 of whom are nobles, and the other 10 merchants or tradeſmen. The town-houſe, where they aſſemble, is a beautiful Gothic ſtructure. In the year 1382, the weavers and other tradeſmen revolted againſt Wenceſlaus, duke of Brabant, and cruelly threw ſeventeen of the magiſtrates out of the town-houſe windows; took arms againſt their prince, and laid waſte the province; but being beſieged, they implored for mercy, and obtained pardon, at the intreaty of Arnold de Hornes, biſhop of Liege, only the moſt culpable being puniſhed; and the weavers, who were the authors of the inſurrection, were baniſhed: they retired for the moſt part to England, where they were well received. Louvain being thus nearly deprived of commerce and inhabitants, John IV. duke of Brabant, with the conſent of pope Martin V. in the year 1426, founded an univerſity, which has ſince been the chief ornament and glory of the place, and is ſaid to reſemble thoſe in England more than any other abroad. There are ſixty colleges in this univerſity, which, though they are much admired for their ſituation and building, are not, however, ſo ſumptuous as thoſe of Oxford and Cambridge. The Dutch have a college here for Roman Catholics, the Engliſh one of Dominican friars, the Iriſh one of ſecular prieſts, another of Dominican friars, and another of Franciſcans. There is alſo a convent here of Engliſh nuns, which is reckoned the beſt of any of this nation in the Low Countries. Louvain prided itſelf as having never been taken by arms: in the year 1542, Martin Roſſem, general of the Gueldrians, attempted it in vain; and in 1572, William, prince of Orange, was compelled to raiſe the ſiege, by the vigorous reſiſtance of the citizens and ſtudents. On the firſt Sunday of July, they have an annual fete, in memory of their deliverance from the Dutch and the French, in 1635, who were compelled by famine to retire. And on the 5th of Auguſt, 1710, the French, under the partiſan de Moulin, attempted to ſurpriſe the city, but were repulſed by the citizens, and obliged to retire in confuſion; this bravery was rewarded by a preſent of a golden key, ſent them by Charles III. king of Spain, as an acknowledgement of their fidelity, which they preſerve in their town-houſe, as a memorial of his majeſty's goodwill. But, nevertheleſs, this city was taken by the French in the year 1746, and again by the ſoldiers of the French republic, under Dumourier, in their haſty progreſs through Brabant, but was evacuated on the 22d of March, 1793; and, indeed, it is but ill adapted for defence, the walls being three leagues in circumference, though not a third part of the incloſure is built on; the reſt being occupied for gardens and vineyards. Louvain was anciently ſituated, part in the dioceſe of Liege, and part in the dioceſe of Cambray, but on the erection of the archbiſhopric of Malines, it was placed under that dioceſe, and ſtill remains: 21 miles SW. Antwerp, and 13 NE. Bruſſels. Long. 22. 15. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 54. N.

LOWESTOFF, or Leſtoff, a town of England, on the coaſt of Suffolk, and moſt eaſterly part of the kingdom. The principal trade is catching and curing herrings, in which buſineſs upwards of thirty boats are employed, and 70,000 barrels have been ſold in a year to the Mediterranean, Germany, and for home conſumption; mackarel and ſoals alſo are caught for the markets of London, Norwich, &c. Several bathing machines have lately been eſtabliſhed, and much company reſorted to enjoy a good air, and the benefit of ſea-bathing. The number of inhabitants is about 2250: 22 miles E. Norwich, and 117 NNE. London.

LOWES WATER, a lake of England, in the county of Cumberland, about ſix miles in circumference: 10 miles S. Cockermouth.

LOWICZ, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Rawa, on the Bſura, in which ſtands a palace belonging to the archbiſhop of Gneſna. This town lies in a moraſs: and beſides a cathedral, has three other churches, and ſome convents. Among the inhabitants are great numbers of artificers; and the fairs held in this town are famous for a variety of goods which are expoſed to ſale in it: 28 miles N. Rawa.

LOWKOW, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Volhynia: 10 miles E. Zytomiers.

LOWOSITZ, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Leitmeritz: 4 miles SW. Leitmeritz.—On the firſt of October 1756, a battle was fought near this place, between the Pruſſians and the Saxons, under the king of Poland, in which the latter were defeated, with the loſs of upwards of 6000 men killed and wounded, and 500 priſoners. The Pruſſians loſt about 2000; this was ſoon followed by the ſurrender of the whole of the Saxon army.

LOWOWECH, or Neuſtat, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Poſnania: 12 miles W. Poſen.

Grenada, and 16 SSE. Cordova. Long. 12. 31. E. Peak of Teneriffe. Lat. 37. 18. N.

LOXA, or Loja, a juriſdiction of South America, in the audience of Quito, with a town of the ſame name, containing two churches, a convent, a college, and an hoſpital. In the territory of this juriſdiction is produced that famous ſpecific for intermitting fevers, known by the name of Caſcarilla de Loja, or Quinquina. The tree which produces the quinquina is not of the largeſt ſize, its uſual height being about two toiſes and a half, and the body and branches of a proportionate thickneſs. In this, however, there is ſome difference, and in that conſiſts the goodneſs of the quinquina, the largeſt branches not yielding the beſt. There is alſo a difference both in the bloſſom and ſeed. The Indians, in order to take off the quinquina, or cortex, cut down the tree; after which they bark it, and dry the quinquina. The juriſdiction of Loja has alſo a very great advantage from breeding the cochineal, and which intelligent perſons reckon of equal goodneſs with that of Oaxaca, in New Spain; but the inhabitants are ſo far from applying themſelves to the breeding of that inſect, ſufficient to ſupply the demands of a particular trade, that they breed no more than what they imagine will be ſufficient for the dyers in that and the neighbouring juriſdiction of Cuença. The number of inhabitants is about 10,000.

LOXAN, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Honan: 30 miles WNW. Kou-ang.

LUANZI, a town of Africa, in the country of Monomotapa: 60 miles NNE. Maſſapa.

LUARCA, a town of Spain, in the province of Aſturia, near the north coaſt: 30 miles NW. Oviedo.

LUBAD, a lake of Aſiatic Turkey, in the province of Natolia: 40 miles E. Balikſen.

LUBAN, a town of Lithuania, in the palatinate of Novogrodek: 20 miles SE. Sluck.

LUBAN, or Louban, one of the Philippine Iſlands, in the Eaſtern Indian Sea, about 4 leagues in circumference, ſubject to the Spaniards.

LUBARTOW, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Volhynia: 36 miles W. Berdiczow.

LUBASZYN, a town of Lithuania, in the palatinate of Minſk: 52 miles E. Minſk.

LUBAT, a town of Aſiatic Turkey, in the province of Natolia: 28 miles W. Burſa.

LUBBECKE, or Luthicke, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and county of Minden, conſiſting of about 258 dwelling-houſes, and which ever ſince the year 1279, when it obtained the privileges of a city, has been environed with ramparts, ditches, and walls. This place enjoys conſiderable immunities, and in particular the territorial juriſdiction over a conſiderable diſtrict. Its magiſtracy are poſſeſſed of the civil and criminal juriſdiction in the firſt inſtance. The chief trade is in yarn and linen, breeding cattle, and brewing beer. The town was wholly deſtroyed by fire in the years 1368 and 1519, as alſo almoſt one half of it in 1705; and in 1734, it likewiſe ſuſtained great damage by the ſame dreadful calamity: 14 miles W. Minden.

LUBBEN, a town of Luſatia, on the river Sprehe, containing four churches: 32 miles W. Guben, and 56 N. Dreſden.

LUBECK, an imperial city of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, ſituated within the limits of Holſtein, on the river Trave, which is a navigable river, and above the city receives the Steckenitz, another navigable ſtream, by means of which it communicates with the Elbe, but below it the Wackenitz, which is likewiſe navigable, and iſſues from the Lake of Ratzeburg. After joining the Sewartau in its progreſs, this river falls into the Baltic. By means of theſe ſeveral ſtreams, long and flat-bottomed veſſels paſs from the Baltic along the Trave, the Steckenitz, and the Elbe, into the German Ocean. The town ſtands on the two ſides of a long hill, of moderate height, the eaſtern part extending itſelf down the declivity towards the Wackenitz, as the weſtern does towards the Trave. Excluſive of walls and towers, it is farther ſurrounded with ſtrong ramparts, and to theſe has the addition of wide moats. The ſtreets are for the moſt part ſteep, and the houſes all of ſtone, and old faſhioned. Ever ſince the year 1530, Lutheraniſm has been the eſtabliſhed religion of the place. Beſides the cathedral of an ancient ſee, it has alſo four parochial churches. This city was the head of the Hanſe towns, and in the town-houſe is a large hall, called Hanſeſaal, where their deputies uſed to meet. An alliance ſtill ſubſiſts between Lubeck, Hamburg, and Bremen, and, under the ſtyle of Hanſe towns, they negociate treaties of commerce with foreign powers. They had their envoy at the treaty of Utrecht, in 1713. Its trade ſtill continues to be very conſiderable, for which its ſituation, as above deſcribed, is extremely commodious. In it, alſo, are divers manufactures. On the ſpot where the city now ſtands, was formerly a town, named Bucu, on the demolition of which, about the year 1144, Adolphus II. count of Holſtein and Schauenburg, laid the firſt foundations of the celebrated city of Lubeck. Its ſpeedy increaſe, and the reſort thither of all the merchants from Bardewick, created ſuch umbrage to Henry the Lion, duke of Saxony, that he gave orders that nothing ſhould be ſold at this place but proviſions. In 1156, Lubeck being burnt down, duke Henry, after a long negociation, prevailed on count Adolphus to give him the town, which having rebuilt, he erected it into a free port, and, in 1158, conferred on it the ſtadtrecht, or municipal right, which took its riſe from Soeſt, and was then become very famous. This right was confirmed to it, in 1188, by the emperor, Frederick I. and, in 1226, by Frederick II. and afterwards by the ſucceeding emperors. In 1276, the whole city was deſtroyed by fire, five houſes only excepted. In the matricula of the empire, its contingent is 480 florins; and to the chamber of Wetzlar it pays 557 rixdollars and 88 kruitzers. The archbiſhopric of Lubeck lies in that part of the duchy of Holſtein which was anciently called Wagria. Its ſee was firſt erected by the emperor Otho I. at Oldenburg, a city of Holſtein, in the year 951, for the converſion of the Wends, who inhabited this country, and removed to Lubeck in the year 1164. The reformation of the dioceſe was begun under biſhop Henry, of Bocholt, and being forwarded by his ſucceſſor, Detlev, of Reventlau, who was promoted to the ſee in 1535, as alſo by the ſucceeding Proteſtant biſhop, it was accompliſhed in 1561. The biſhop of Lubeck, though a prince of the empire, yet in the college of the princes ſits neither on the ſpiritual or temporal bench, but on a particular one placed croſswiſe, and laid there purely for him and the biſhop of Oſnabruck, when a Lutheran. He has alſo a vote among the princes of the circle of Lower Saxony. In the matricula of the empire, he is aſſeſſed at three horſe, or 36 florins, and his quota to the chamber of Wetzlar is 40 rixdollars 52¼ kruitzers. The cathedral ſtands in the imperial city of Lubeck, where, however, it is inveſted with no manner of authority. The chapter conſiſts of 30 perſons, who, four Roman Catholics excepted, are all Lutherans: 40 miles NE. Hamburg. Long. 28. 19. E. Ferro. Lat. 53. 55. N.

LUBECK, or Luboi, an iſland in the Eaſtern Indian Ocean, near the iſland of Madura. Long. 112. 20. E. Greenwich. Lat. 5. 50. N.

LUBIEN, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Poſnania: 26 miles SSW. Poſen.

LUBLENIETZ, or Lubenſky, a town of Sileſia, in the principality of Oppeln: 42 miles N. Beuthen, and 29 E. Oppeln.

LUBLIN, a city of Poland, and capital of a palatinate; part of which is annexed to the new country of Galicia. It is ſurrounded with a wall and ditch, and a place of good trade, but not very large. It has a caſtle, built on a high rock, and ſtands on the little river Byſtrzna, in a very pleaſant and fertile country. Here are ſeveral churches and convents. Great numbers of Jews live in the ſuburbs of Lublin, and have a ſpacious ſynagogue there. Three annual fairs are held here (and each of them laſts a month) which are frequented by great numbers of German, Greek, Armenian, Arabian, Ruſſian, Turkiſh, and other traders and merchants. The chief tribunal for Little Poland is held here, beſides a provincial diet, and a court of judicature. In the year 1240, Lublin was ſet on fire by the Tartars; and after that continued for a long time in the poſſeſſion of the Ruſſians. In 1447 and in 1606, this town alſo ſuffered greatly by fire, and in 1656, it was laid in aſhes by the Swedes: 115 miles ENE. Cracow, and 85 SE. Warſaw. Long. 23. E. Greenwich. Lat. 51. 18. N.

LUBLYO, a town and citadel of Hungary: 4 miles WNW. Palotza.

LUBNEKI, a town of Samogitia: 10 miles N. Medniki.

LUBNI, a town of Ruſſia, in the government of Kiev, on the Sula: 80 miles ESE. Kiev. Long. 50. 40. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. N.

LUBOMLA, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Chelm: 32 miles E. Chelm.

LUBOZ, a town of Lithuania, in the palatinate of Novogrodek: 16 miles NE. Novogrodek.

LUBRIN, a town of Spain, in the province of Grenada: 5 miles W. Vera.

LUC, a town of Germany, in the circle of Bavaria, and landgraviate of Leuchtenberg, on the Nab: 6 miles N. Premt, and 12 ENE. Amberg.

LUC, a town of France, in the department of the Lower Pyrennées: 2 leagues N. Oleron, and 4 W. Pau.

LUC, a town of France, in the department of the Drôme, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Die, on the Drôme: 3 leagues S. Die.

LUC (Le), a town of France, in the department of the Var, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Draguignan: 5 leagues S. Draguignan, and 4 E. Brignolle.

LUC, a town of France, in the department of the Lozere, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Langogne: 5 miles S. Langogne.

LUCANAS, a town of South America, which gives name to a juriſdiction, in the biſhopric of Guamanga, which contains ſome of the richeſt ſilver mines of Peru, ſituated not far from the ſource of the river Apurimac. According to an account ſent to Lima, a volcano near this town burſt forth on the night of the 28th of October, the ſame day in which Lima was deſtroyed by an earthquake, and threw out ſuch a quantity of water, that the whole country was overflowed. The juriſdiction begins about 25 or 30 leagues ſouth-weſt of Guamanga. Its temperature is cold and moderate. The parts of the former breed large droves of all ſorts of cattle; and thoſe of the latter are fertile in grain, herbs, and fruits. It alſo abounds in valuable ſilver mines, in which chiefly the riches of Peru conſiſt, and by that means made the centre of a very large commerce, great numbers of merchants reſorting hither with their goods, and others for purchaſing ſuch proviſions as their own countries do not afford, for which they give in exchange, ingots and pinnas of ſilver.

LUCAU, or Lucca, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and principality of Altenburg: 8 miles NNW. Altenburg, and 13 S. Leipſic. Long. 30. 2. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 3. N.

LUCAU, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Carinthia, near the Geil: 13 miles W. Mouten, and 32 E. Brixen.

LUCAYA ISLANDS, ſee Bahama.

LUCAN, a village of Ireland, on the river Liffey, 6 miles from Dublin. It is noted for a medicinal ſpring.

LUCCA, a republic and ſtate of Italy, bounded towards the north by the duchy of Modena, on the ſouth-weſt by the Mediterranean, every where elſe by Tuſcany; about 24 miles in length, and from 10 to 20 in breadth. The country is in general mountainous, but by the induſtry of the inhabitants is rendered fertile, every corner of the land being cultivated in perfection. The corn raiſed is generally inſufficient for the inhabitants; of wine they have ſufficient, and olives in abundance. The common people receive part of their ſupport from cheſtnuts, lupins, and French beans: the number of ſouls in the city and the 150 villages belonging to it, is computed at upwards of 120,000, whereof between 20,000 and 30,000 are able, on occaſion, to bear arms. The induſtry of the people in improving, to the beſt advantage, every ſpot of their ground, is equally ſurpriſing and commendable. The vicinity of the grand duchy of Tuſcany keeps them ever on their guard for the ſecurity of their freedom; on which account the protection of ſome foreign power is of abſolute neceſſity to them. When the Lombards over-ran Italy, it became ſubject to their power, afterwards it was compriſed in the dominions of the kings of the Franks, and from them the emperors of Germany claimed its ſovereignty. At the time of the long interregnum the inhabitants formed the project of independency, which they carried on inſenſibly till the time of the emperor, Charles IV. when they openly detached themſelves from the empire, and put themſelves under the protection of Spain. The regency conſiſts of a gonfaloniere, or ſtandard-bearer, formerly the title of the ſovereigns of Florence. He is like the doge at Venice and Genoa, except his being ſtyled only excellenza. With him are joined nine counſellors, called Anziani. Theſe ten perſons, whilſt in the adminiſtration, live in the ſtate palace, and at the public expence; but are changed every two months, and choſen out of the great councils, which is compoſed of 240 nobles, of whom one half forms the ordinary counſellors, and the other the extraordinary. Both, once in two years, are changed, by a new election. The ordinary revenue of the republic is about 400,000 ſcudi; it maintains a regular body of 500 men, and 70 Switzers, as a guard for the gonfaloniere and the nine regent counſellors.

LUCCA, a city of Italy, and capital of the republic, anciently a Roman colony, the reſidence of the government, moſt delightfully ſituated in a plain, terminating in eminences, and diverſified with villages, ſeats, ſummer-houſes, vineyards, meadows, and corn-fields. Every thing, either for utility or pleaſure, is here in great plenty. The city is regularly fortified with 11 baſtions. Its circuit is 3 Italian miles. The houſes are handſome, the ſtreets broad and well paved, but moſt of them irregular. The inhabitants are ſomewhat above 40,000, and among them great numbers of artizans and manufacturers, who carry on a conſiderable trade, particularly in ſilk goods. The ſtate palace is a large building, and includes the arſenal, which has arms for 20,000 men. The biſhop holds immediately of the pope, and is entitled to the pallium and crucifix, as an archbiſhop. The cathedral is a Gothic building, and has in it a volto ſanto, or wooden crucifix, to which a peculiar veneration is paid: 34 miles W. Florence, and 19 NNE. Leghorn. Long. 28. 7. E. Ferro. Lat. 43. 48. N.

LUCCA, a river of Aſia, which riſes in Perſia, and runs into the Indus, about 6 leagues above the conflux with the Chunaub.

LUCCI, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Calabria Citra: 2½ miles S. Biſignano.

LUCCOS, a river of Africa, in the empire of Morocco, anciently called Lixos, which runs into the Atlantic at Laracha.

LUCE BAY, a large bay on the ſouth coaſt of Scotland, and county of Wigton, between the Mull of Galloway and Burrowhead.

LUCE, a river of Scotland, which runs into the ſea, in a large bay, about 1½ mile S. Glenluce.

LUCEA (Eaſt and Weſt), two rivers of the iſland of Jamaica, which empty themſelves into Lucea Harbour.

LUCEA HARBOUR, a bay or harbour of the iſland of Jamaica, on the north ſide: 14 miles W. Montego Bay. Long. 78. 9. W. Greenwich. Lat. 18. 28. N.

LUCELLE, or Lutzel, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, and biſhopric of Bâle: 2 miles W. Lauffen.

LUCENA, a town of Spain, in the province of Cordova; here are 10 convents: 29 miles SSE. Cordova, and 40 NW. Grenada. Long. 12. 17. E. Peak of Teneriffe. Lat. 37. 32. N.

LUCENA, a town of Spain, in the province of Valencia: 6 leagues NE. Segorva.

Lucenay l'Evêque, a town of France, in the department of the Saône, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Autun: 2½ leagues N. Autun, and 3½ WSW. Arnay le Duc. Long. 21. 55. E. Ferro. Lat. 47. 5. N.

LUCENAY-LES-AIX, a town of France, in the department of the Nyevre, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Decize: 3 leagues S. Decize.

LUCERA, a city of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and capital of the province of Capitanata; containing 4 churches, and 9 monaſteries; the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Benevento. The juriſdiction of the province is held here: it is ſmall, but populous, and has a manufacture of cloth: 60 miles NE. Naples, and 130 E. Rome. Long. 33. E. Ferro. Lat. 41. 28. N.

LUCERNA, a town of Piedmont, in the province of the Four Vallies, to one of which it gives name: 5 miles SW. Pinerolo.

LUCERNE, a canton of Swiſſerland, bounded on the eaſt by the cantons of Zug and Schwitz, on the ſouth by the canton of Unterwalden, and elſewhere by the canton of Berne; about thirty miles long, and in its greateſt breadth nearly as much; eſteemed the largeſt and the firſt in rank among the Catholic cantons, and the third among the whole. The ſoil is fertile, but unequal, ſome parts are only fit for paſtures and the cultivation of fruit, others are arable, and produce good corn; in other parts are found moſt of the European productions. The wine of the country is not ſufficient for the conſumption of the inhabitants, and of this article they purchaſe, every year, to the amount of 200,000 crowns from France and Baden; ſalt is procured from France and Bavaria. The exportation of cheeſe is very conſiderable. The ordinary food of the huſbandman is potatoes, fruit, legumes, bread, and milk. The woodlands are conſiderable; game would be abundant if there were fewer ſportſmen. Chamois, deer, hares, black foxes, badgers, and martens, are the principal wild animals. The ſouthern part is mountainous, but, nevertheleſs, without glaciers; the mountains are covered with foreſts and paſtures, fit for cattle. Here and there are found ſome natural curioſities, petrified ſhells, lac lunæ, ſome metallic ores, mineral waters, pit coal, &c. The principal lake is the Waldſtatter See, or Lake of Lucerne; the principal river is the Reuſs; the principal mountain is Mount Pilate. This canton has always been ſtrongly attached to the Roman Catholic religion, and in ſpirituals is under the juriſdiction of the biſhop of Conſtance. Lucerne is the capital.

LUCERNE, a town of Swiſſerland, and capital of the canton of the ſame name, ſituated on the Waldſtatter See, otherwiſe called The Lake of Lucerne, where the Reuſs iſſues from it, which river divides it into two parts, communicating with each other by means of bridges. The ſtreets are clean, and the houſes tolerably well built. Whatever might have been the antiquity of this town, it inconteſtably received great increaſe from the eſtabliſhment of a monaſtery, founded in the ſixth century, under the abby of Murbach, in Alſace, which abby held the juriſdiction over Lucerne and ſome other neighbouring fiefs, and which juriſdiction was ſold to the duke of Auſtria. In 1332, the Lucernois entered into a league with Uri, Schwitz, and Unterwalden. By this treaty, although they lived in open enmity with the Auſtrians, yet the rights of the duke were reſerved. By the battle of Sempach, in 1386, they became totally free from the Auſtrian dominion, which freedom was confirmed by the peace of 1 89. The government of Lucerne appears purely ariſtocratic, nevertheleſs, this ariſtocracy is reſtrained in divers reſpects, as on the matter of making war or peace, concluding new alliances, acquiring new territories, or impoſing new taxes, the content of all the citizens muſt be obtained. All the militia of the canton are divided into five brigades of infantry, and each brigade into five battalions of 600 men. The cavalry conſiſts of three companies of dragoons, and the corps of artillery is compoſed of five companies. The arſenal of Lucerne is well furniſhed, and the cannons are new. The grand church is very handſome: the town-houſe is nothing remarkable. Lucerne is the reſidence of a nuncio from the pope, under the title of Legatus à latere: 38 miles E. Bern, and 60 SW. Conſtance. Long. 25. 52. E. Ferro. Lat. 47. N.

LUCEY, a town of France, in the department of the Meurte, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Toul: 1 league NW. Toul, and 4½ SSW. Pont a Mouſſon.

LUCHEUX, a town of France, in the department of the Somme, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Doulens: 1½ league NE. Doulens, and 5 SW. Arras.

LUCHO, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and principality of Luneburg, on the Jetze: being ſituated in a marſhy ſoil, moſt of the houſes are built on piles: 54 miles NE. Zell, and 40 ESE. Luneburg.

LUCHOWICE, a town of Lithuania, in the palatinate of Novogrodek: 40 miles SSE. Novogrodek.

LUCHY, a town of France, in the department of the Oiſe, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Breteuil: 3 leagues N. Beauvais.

LUCIANA, a town of Spain, in the country of Seville: 8 miles WNW. Ecija.

LUCIANO, a town of Spain, in New Caſtile: 19 miles W. Civdad Real.

LUCINISSA, a town of Germany, in the county of Goritz: 4 miles S. Goritz.

LUCINO, a river of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, which runs into the Gulf of Tarento: 2 miles NNW. Roſſano.

LUCIPARA, an iſland in the Eaſtern Indian Sea. Long. 105. 14. E. Greenwich. Lat. 4. 10. S.

LUCITO, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and county of Moliſe: 11 miles NE. Moliſe.

LUCKAU, a town of Luſatia: 50 miles SE. Franckfort on the Oder, and 49 N. Dreſden.

LUCKENS, a town of Sweden, in the province of Drontheim: 25 miles SSW. Drontheim.

LUCKENWALDE, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and principal place of a diſtrict, or circle, in the duchy of Magdeburg. In the year 1723, great part of the town was deſtroyed by fire: 50 miles E. Magdeburg, and 18 S. Potzdam.

LUCKIDUAR, a town of Aſia, in the country of Bootan: 50 miles S. Taſſaſudon.

LUCKNOW, a town of Hindooſtan, and capital of the ſubah of Oude, ſituated on the Goomty; founded by Latſchman, or Lacman, and rebuilt by Bikarmadjit, king of Oude. Aurengzebe, as a memorial, built a moſque on the ſpot where the founder reſided. The town is without walls; many of the houſes are of brick, but the greater part are mud walls, covered with tiles, and built on eminences here and there, whence the inequality of the ground makes it troubleſome to walk, continually aſcending and deſcending: the ſtreets are narrow and ſtinking, every kind of filth being thrown in them, and no care taken to keep them clean: Sujah Dowla deſtroyed moſt of the ancient palaces, and erected others. There are ſome, but not many, magnificent edifices. The houſes of the merchants are of brick, lofty and ſtrong: 215 miles SE. Delhi, and 95 NNW. Allahabad. Long. 81. 14. E. Greenwich. Lat. 26. 52. N.

LUCKO, or Luzk, a town of Poland, and capital of the palatinate of Volhynia, with a caſtle, where the biſhop of Volhynia reſided, and the Jeſuits had a college. This city is alſo the reſidence of a Ruſſian biſhop, and has a provincial diet and court of judicature. In the year 1429, a remarkable conference was held here, at which the emperor Sigiſmund, two kings, and ſeveral princes, were preſent. In 1752, the greateſt part of this city was deſtroyed by fire: 200 miles ENE. Cracow, and 176 SE. Warſaw. Long. 25. 45. E. Greenwich. Lat. 50. 45. N.

LUCO, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Abruzzo Ultra: 9 miles SSW. Celano.

Luçon, a town of France, in the department of the Vendée, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Fontenay le Comte, ſituated on a canal, about two leagues in length, which communicates with the ſea: the environs are marſhy, and the air is unwholeſome. Before the revolution, it was the ſee of a biſhop: 5 leagues W. Fontenay le Comte. Long. 16. 30. E. Ferro. Lat. 46. 29. N.

Luçon or Luçonia, the principal of the Philippine iſlands, in the Eaſtern Indian Sea, called alſo Manilla, from its capital; the largeſt in point of ſize, and the moſt northerly as to ſituation. The form has been ſaid, in ſome degree, to reſemble the human arm bent; a peninſula extending towards the ſouthern extremity very far to the eaſt. Not including this peninſula, the length of the iſland from north to ſouth is about 100 leagues, and the breadth from 30 to 40; the peninſula is about 40 in length, and from ſix to twelve in breadth. The climate is hot and moiſt, the moiſture occaſioned by the vaſt abundance of waters of all ſorts; wells, lakes, ſprings, rivulets and great rivers. The higher grounds being accounted the moſt healthy, perſons of diſtinction have their country houſes in the mountains, to which they retire about the middle of March, and continue there to the end of June. As for the natives, without uſing many precautions, they live generally to a great age. Rice, which elſewhere requires much cultivation, grows in every part of this iſland, with little or no care at all, even on the tops of the higheſt mountains, without being watered; and this circumſtance occaſions ſuch plenty, that the Indians are ſaid to value gold ſo little, as not to pick it up, though it is found almoſt every where. Wheat they have none but what is imported; yet the ſoil is very capable of bearing it, as appeared by an experiment that was made, when one buſhel produced 130. Rice, which is the corn of the country, is of different kinds, ſome requiring four or five months between the ſowing and harveſt, and ſome ſown and reaped within the ſpace of forty days. With all its fertility, Luçon is ſubject to great diſadvantages; the very worſt of theſe are earth-quakes, which are here both frequent and terrible; next to theſe may be reckoned their burning mountains, of which there are ſeveral. Nevertheleſs the face of the iſland is far from being disfigured by them, or by the conſequences of their exploſions; on the contrary, there is no ſoil more pleaſant or fruitful. The graſs grows, the trees bud, bloſſom, and bear fruit at once, all the year round, and this as well on the mountains as in gardens. The richeſt fruits of the Weſt Indies, as well as the Eaſt, grow here plentifully, and ſome that are to be found no where elſe. They have forty different ſorts of palm-trees, the moſt excellent cocoas, and excellent caſſia. In the mountains they have wild cinnamon, wild nutmegs, ebony, ſandal-wood, together with excellent timber for building and ſhipping. All kinds of cattle they have in the greateſt abundance, ſo that a large fat ox does not coſt above four pieces of eight; civet cats are very common here, and their civet highly valuable; amber is thrown upon their coaſts, and frequently ambergriſe, in prodigious quantities. In every part of Luçon, gold is found on their mountains, waſhed out of the earth by the heavy rains; in the mould of their vallies, carried down by the rivulets; and in the ſand and mud of their lakes, brooks, and rivers. The Spaniards obtain about 1000 or 1500 pounds weight every year, by a tribute of the inhabitants. The Spaniards found upon the coaſt a nation of Moors, who called themſelves Tagalians or Tagaleze, and are Malayans by deſcent, as is evident from their colour, ſhape, habit, manners, and language. They are for the moſt part, a modeſt, tractable, and well diſpoſed people. In ſome provinces they found Pintadoes, that is, painted negroes, perſons tall, ſtraight, ſtrong, active, and of an excellent diſpoſition: laſtly, blacks, who lived in the mountains and thick woods, on whom the Spaniards have beſtowed the name of Negrilloes, a rude and barbarous people. In the mountains, near ſprings, and in caves pleaſantly ſituated, live a nation called the Ilayas, or Tinghianos, whom ſome ſuppoſe to be deſcended from the Japaneſe, as free as the Negrilloes, but agreeing with them in no other reſpect, for they are very brave, and yet very courteous and humane. This iſland is divided into provinces, moſt of them under the juriſdiction of the Spaniards: the principal are Balayan, in which are 2500 tributary Indians; in that of Camarinas is the city of New Caceres, the ſee of a biſhop; Paracale contains about 7000 Indians, who pay tribute to Spain; this province abounds in mines of gold and other metals, and of valuable loadſtones. In Cagayan are 9000 tributaries; but the richeſt and moſt populous province is ſaid to be that of Illocos, whoſe coaſt extends upwards of thirty leagues. There are ſeveral others, ſuch as Pangaſian, Bahi, Balacan, &c. Long. 136. to 141. E. Ferro. Lat. 12. 30. to 18. N.

LUCRINO, a lake of Italy, not far from Naples, anciently celebrated for its green oyſters and other fiſh; it was ſeparated from the ſea only by a bank thrown up by the labour of man. In the year 1538, an earthquake formed a mountain near two miles in circumference, and 200 feet in height, conſiſting of lava, burned ſtones, ſcoria, &c. which left no appearance of a lake, but a moraſs, filled with ruſhes.

LUNEBURG, a town of Pruſſia, in the province of Natangen: 34 miles SSE. Konigſberg.

LUNEBURG, a city of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and capital of the principality of Luneburg Zell, ſituated on the navigable river Ilmenau, ſurrounded with moats and walls, fortified with towers; and containing three churches, about 1300 houſes, and 9000 inhabitants. In Luneburg are alſo three hoſpitals, of which two contain each a church. On the market-place ſtands the prince's palace, with the guildhall, and fronting them is the abby of Heiligenthal, which was ſequeſtrated by the magiſtracy in 1530, and its church now ſerves as a ſalt-magazine. An anatomical theatre was built in the year 1753 The convent of St. Michael was ſuppreſſed, and inſtead thereof an academy founded for martial exerciſes. The burghers conſiſt of four orders, viz. the patricians (who out of the town enjoy alſo the privileges of nobles, have always been cautious in their marriages, and are for the moſt part proprietors of manors) the brewers, the kagelbruder (merchants and tradeſmen) and the artizans. To theſe four claſſes are likewiſe to be added the ſulzers, boatmen, and day labourers. Since the year 1639, the magiſtracy here are one-half of them patricians, and one-half men of letters, and theſe are inveſted with low and high juriſdiction. The Sulze conſtitutes a diſtinct part of the town, which is walled in, and has its own ſeparate magiſtracy. It conſiſts of fifty-four ſmall houſes, built deep in the ground, and in each are four large leaden pans, which are new caſt every month, for the receiving of the brine, which is left to exhale in them, and out of this exhalation is formed the ſalt. From the ſeveral ſprings, the ſalt-water is conveyed by pipes into a reſervoir in the Sulze, and there diſtributed among the houſes. The ſalt produced belongs to thoſe who are poſſeſſed of a pan, or a ſhare, either of their own or hired. The ſalt-houſes here are fifty-four in number, containing 216 pans of ſalt, which are daily boiled, and every ſalt-houſe eſtimated at 40,000 rixdollars, ſo that the capital of the whole Sulze, greatly exceeds two millions of rixdollars. Of theſe ſalt-works a fifth belongs to the ſovereign's due. The town of Luneburg farther pays annually to the treaſury near 6000 rixdollars. Formerly, when there has been a larger rent for the ſalt, upwards of 120,000 tons of that commodity have been annually boiled in the Sulze, and all ſold off. But ſince the commencement of this century, the ſalt-trade has fallen to a low ebb. The two rocks weſt of the town, which are known by the names of the Schildſtein and Kalkberg, afford lime-ſtone. Till the year 1702, ſilver and gold were alſo coined at this place, but, at preſent, only a baſe ſort of money is made here, called the Scharſe, thirty-two of which amount to no more than one Miſman Groſchen. Its exports are ſalt, lime, and beer. Luneburg trades likewiſe in wax, honey, wool, flax, linen, and frize. Goods alſo are brought here from all parts of Germany, and forwarded down the Ilmenau to Hamburg, and to Lubeck, their returns likewiſe coming the ſame way. The warehouſes for theſe imports and exports ſtand on the Ilmenau. The commerce carried on here is ſuperintended by a particular commiſſion. In the year 1073, Luneberg was become a large place, but in that year was ſurprized by the emperor, Henry IV. together with Kalkberg. In the year 1138, the marggrave Albert of Brandenburg, twice made himſelf maſter of this fort; but Gertrude, mother to duke Henry the Lion, recovered it. On the demiſe of duke William, the inhabitants, inſtead of acknowledging duke Magnus, entertained hopes of becoming free, and immediately dependent on the empire, and in 1371, got poſſeſſion of the fort by a ſtratagem, but in 1442, purchaſed the property of it from the dukes Frederick William and Otho. In 1636, the Swedes laid ſiege to the town, which on the haſty ſurrender of the Kalkberg, was brought to a ſpeedy concluſion. In 1637, duke George, of Luneburg, recovered it; and in 1651, the city ceded its right in it to duke Chriſtian Lewis, who improved its fortifications: 36 miles SE. Hamburg, and 40 S. Lubeck. Long. 28. E. Ferro. Lat. 53. 18. N.

LUNEBURG ZELL, a principality of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, bounded on the north by the duchy of Lauenburg and the Elbe, on the eaſt by the duchies of Brunſwick and Mecklenburg, on the ſouth by the principality of Calenberg and the duchy of Brunſwick, and on the weſt by the duchies of Bremen and Verden, the county of Hoya, and the principality of Calenberg. The ſoil here is various: along the Elbe, the Aller, the Jetze, and ſome other ſmall rivers, are fruitful marſh-lands, but other parts of it, to the amount of upwards of 3000 acres, are ſandy; others again conſiſt of heaths, others of turf moors, and ſome are ſwampy. The worſt parts in it are towards its centre, through which lie the main roads. Agreeably to the diverſity of its ſoil, it produces wheat, rye, barley, oats, peas, buck-wheat, flax, hemp, hops, garden-ſtuff, oak, beech, firs, pines, birch, and elder. Some bailiwicks do not produce a ſufficiency of wheat, but others again have a ſuperfluity; ſome likewiſe breed but few horned cattle and horſes, though they abound in others. The heaths are covered with numerous flocks of a ſmall kind of ſheep, having long coarſe wool. The culture of bees on them is ſuch, as to yield conſiderable quantities of honey and wax. The rivers afford plenty of good fiſh. Luneburg abounds in excellent lime-ſtone, and very profitable ſalt-ſprings. The Elbe, which traverſes the eaſt and north ſides of this principality, is of great advantage to it, by fertilizing the adjacent marſh-lands, as alſo with reſpect to its fiſheries, navigation, and tolls. Other rivers are the Jetze, the Old-Mark, the Ilmenau, the Luhe, the Seeve, the Aller, &c. In this principality are three large towns, namely, Luneburg, Velzen, and Zell, with eleven ſmaller, and thirteen boroughs, or large villages. The principal manufactures and fabrics in this principality are thoſe of linen, cotton, cloth, ribbons, ſtockings and hats. This principality was formed out of the hereditary lands of the Billungs, who were deſcended from count Billung, whoſe ſon, Hermann, was, by the emperor Otho I. created duke of Saxony. His male iſſue failed in the perſon of duke Magnus, by whoſe eldeſt daughter, Wulfhild, the hereditary eſtates of the houſe of Billung came to her huſband, Henry the Black, duke of Bavaria, and his deſcendants. This principality entitles the king of Great Britain to both a ſeat and voice in the college of the princes of the empire, and the circle of Lower Saxony. Its matricular aſſeſſment is 20 horſe, and 120 foot, or 720 florins per month.

LUS, a town of France, in the department of the Upper Pyrennées, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Argellez: 1 league SW. Barege, and 3 S. Argellez.

LUSATIA, a country of Germany, bounded on the north by the mark of Brandenburg, on the eaſt by Sileſia, on the ſouth by Bohemia, and on the weſt by Meiſſen. It is about twenty-eight leagues long, and fifteen wide, and is divided into Upper and Lower. Upper Luſatia abounds more in mountains and hills, and enjoys a purer air, than the Lower, in which are found many boggy and mooriſh tracts. The latter, on the contrary, has a great number of woods, and thoſe finer ones than are to be met with in the firſt, the fat tracts of which generally feel a great ſcarcity of timber, with which the others, notwithſtanding, are ſufficiently provided, and even the very great heaths themſelves, to exuberance. Peat and turf are found in different parts. In the mountainous tracts of Upper Luſatia, on the borders of Bohemia and Sileſia, is but little room for agriculture. The heaths on the confines of Lower Luſatia, and partly alſo on thoſe of Sileſia, conſiſt of poor ſoil, affording little elſe but fine game. The champaign conſiſts partly of a meagre land, and partly of a flat and very profitable marſh-land, the latter of which is met with in the centre of Upper Luſatia. In Lower Luſatia are both heathy and fertile tracts. In each of theſe marquiſates, rye, wheat, barley, and oats are cultivated, as alſo much buck-wheat, together with peas, lentils, beans, and millet. In it likewiſe we find what is uſually called manna. The culture of flax here is pretty good. With reſpect to orchard and garden fruits, as alſo to the culture of hops, tobacco, and wine, Lower Luſatia has greatly the preference to the Upper. They make likewiſe ſome white and red wine. The products of this country, however, do not ſufficiently anſwer the neceſſities of the inhabitants, corn, fruit, hops, garden-ſtuff, and wine being imported into the Luſatias. The breeding of cattle here is very conſiderable, and there is plenty of game: and the rivers, lakes, and ponds yield divers ſorts of good fiſh. Here and there we find a white, whitiſh-grey, and a reddiſh coloured clayey-earth, which is uſed for all ſorts of veſſels; as alſo tobacco-pipes, and ſtone quarries. On the mountains of Lobau and Konigſheyn, diamonds are dug, which reſemble the Bohemian; and in the tracts of Lauban we ſometimes meet with agates and jaſpers. In ſeveral places a pretty good iron-ſtone is found and worked. The medicinal ſprings are not inconſiderable. The principal rivers are the Spree, the Black Elſter, and the Pulſnitz. In Upper Luſatia are reckoned ſix towns, which are called, by way of eminence, The Towns, or The Six Towns, ſixteen ſmaller country towns, and four market ones; but in the Lower only four towns, which appear at the land diets, together with thirteen country towns, and two market ones. The moſt ancient inhabitants of this country, of whom we have any certain knowledge, were the Semnones, or Senones, a Swabian nation, who inhabited Upper Luſatia, but by their cuſtom of wandering, theſe gave place to the Wandalers, and theſe laſt again by a like expedition, in the ſeventh century, to the Sorber-Wends, who were a Sclavonian people. In the twelfth century alſo, ſome new inhabitants from the Low Countries and the Rhine, arrived in theſe parts. Even to this day, the towns are almoſt wholly peopled with German inhabitants; but in the villages a greater number of Wends than Germans is to be met with. Some ſmall ſparks of the Chriſtian doctrine were for the firſt time made known to the Wends here, in the ſeventh century. Luther's doctrine, ſo early as the year 1521, found acceptance among them, as well in the Upper as in the Lower Luſatia, which doctrine ſo ſpread itſelf by degrees, that the proteſtants' Lutheran religion became the prevailing church there, as it continues even to this day. In the year 1750, a royal mandate was addreſſed to the count of Gerſdorf, at that time ſuperintendant of Budiſzin, purporting that the fraternal community of Herrnhuthers, in Upper Luſatia, ſhould be indulged and protected in quality of faithful ſubjects. By the purchaſe too and poſſeſſion of ſeveral noble eſtates, as Herrnhuth, Bertholdorf, Hennerſdorf, Nieſchky, Trabus, &c. they have obtained not only civil power, but alſo the patronage of churches. Without the aſſiſtance of manufactures, Luſatia would be unable to ſupport its inhabitants, but in the numerous and good woollen and linen ſtuffs, it enjoys an important means of ſubſiſtence. Theſe flouriſh principally in Upper Luſatia. The cloth manufactures are the oldeſt, having been in vogue in ſeveral towns, ſo early as the thirteenth century. The linen manufactures here are alſo important, and the moſt conſiderable of theſe lie in Upper Luſatia. The conduct of the emperors Ferdinand II. and III. as alſo of Leopold, towards the proteſtants in Bohemia and Sileſia, cauſed vaſt numbers of people to retire to Upper Luſatia, who, upon that, with great vigor, erected the ſeveral villages which ſtood on the borders of theſe countries, being moſtly ſituated in mountains, and for the generality followed the linen-weaving buſineſs. From this time, that is, from the year 1623, this country met with a quite different and better reception, for it became more populous and powerful; and to theſe new inhabitants, whoſe poſterity were ſo greatly increaſed, are owing the ſucceeding inundation of linen manufactures and trade, in Upper Luſatia, which happened principally between the years 1660 and 1690. In Luſatia are made all ſorts of linen, from unbleached yarn, common and fine, as alſo fine white damaſk for table and bed-cloths, and white tick. The black and fine dyings alſo ſupport many hands; and, excluſive of theſe, there are in Luſatia good manufactures of hats, leather, paper, gunpowder, iron, glaſs, and wax-bleaching, together with other works of artiſts and handicrafts-people. By means of theſe manufactures, and in particular by means of the cloths and linens, a conſiderable trade is carried on there, which, indeed, is not at preſent ſo great as it was formerly, but ſtill is not unimportant, being productive of great advantage to Luſatia, as it exceeds the importation in wool, yarn, and ſilk, which are employed for their manufactures in foreign ſilk, and woollen commodities, gold and ſilver lace-points, &c. in wines, ſpices, corn, freſh and baked fruits, garden-ſtuff, and hops. The great trade carried on in linen, had its beginning in the year 1684. Upper Luſatia formerly belonged to Bohemia. Lower Luſatia, which alone, till the fifteenth century, was called Luſatia, was firſt erected into a marquiſate in the year 931, by Henry I. king of Germany. In the middle of the ſixteenth century, they were both ceded to the elector of Saxony, in conſideration of a large ſum of money, which the elector had advanced to the emperor, in his war with the Bohemians, with condition only that the kings of Bohemia ſhould retain the armorial bearings. The whole is now divided between the king of Pruſſia and the elector of Saxony.

LUXEMBURG, a duchy of Germany, and one of the provinces of the Netherlands, bounded on the north by the biſhopric of Liege, and duchies of Limburg and Juliers, on the eaſt by the electorate of Treves, and on the ſouth and weſt by France. It lies in the centre of the foreſt of Ardennes. Its ſoil is not very fertile, but it produces ſome corn, and the country has other advantages belonging to it, as, namely, a good breed of cattle, wine, and all ſorts of game, with ſeveral kinds of metals, and particularly many iron-works, and founderies for cannon, which laſt conſtitute its greateſt riches. It is watered alſo by many ſmall rivers, the principal of which are the Ourt, the Semois, the Laſs, and the Chiers, which diſcharge themſelves into the Meuſe, with ſeveral others which flow into the Moſelle. The Meuſe waſhes this duchy on the weſt, and the Moſelle runs through a part of it to the ſouth-eaſt. In the whole duchy, excluſive of the principal town (Luxemburg) are 23 other ſmaller ones. Charles IV. emperor of the Romans, raiſed the county of Luxemburg, in the year 1354, to a duchy, but he dying without heirs the duchy came by virtue of his teſtament to Wenzel, ſon to the emperor Charles IV. king of the Romans and Bohemia, who by way of mortgage, ceded to the princeſs Elizabeth, daughter to his brother John of Luxemburg, and duke of Gorlitz (who was firſt married to Anthony, duke of Burgundy, and afterwards to John of Bavaria) this duchy in lieu of the dowry of 120,000 Rheniſh florins, which he had promiſed to give her. In the year 1444, this princeſs ceded all her right in the duchy of Luxemburg to Philip the Good, duke of Burgundy. Afterwards this duchy underwent the ſame fate with the other provinces of the Netherlands. By the peace of the Pyrennées in 1659, France obtained a part thereof. The part ceded to France, included the diſtricts and towns of Thionville, Montmedy, Marville, Chevancy, Carignan, and Damvilliers; and during the preſent war, the whole has ſubmitted to the French Republic.

LUXEMBURG, a city of Garmany, and capital of the province ſo called. It was anciently a caſtle, built by the people of Treves, afterwards enlarged by the Romans, who gave it the name of Auguſta Romanorum: when Meroveus, king of France, conquered the country, it hanged its name, and was called Lucis Burgum, i. e. The City of the Sun, becauſe the ſun was anciently adored there, as the moon was at Arlon, Jupiter at Ivoy, now called Carignan, and Mars at Marche-en-Famine, The city of Luxemburg is ſmall, but ſtrong, as well from its ſituation as its fortifications. Sigefroy I. comte of Luxemburg, built a wall round it in the tenth century. In 1543, Luxemburg was taken and pillaged by the French, commanded by Charles, duke of Orleans, ſecond ſon of Francis I. but in the year 1544, Ferdinand de Gouſagne, viceroy of Sicily, and general under Charles V. retook it, after a ſiege of fifteen days. In 1559, it was again beſieged by the duke of Guiſe, but he was obliged to retire on account of the defeat of the French army, at St. Quentin. In 1597, the marquis de Biron thought to take it by a coup-de-main, becauſe it had then only a ſmall garriſon, but he found ſuch an obſtinate reſiſtance from the citizens, that he was compelled to abandon his enterprize. The city remained under the dominion of Spain, till the year 1684, when the French came to aſſault it, under the command of marechal de Crequy, after they had bombarded it the 22d of December, the preceding year; the trenches were opened the 8th of May, and the city ſurrendered the 4th of June. The French continued maſters, by virtue of a treaty made at Ratiſbon the ſame year, and very much extended the fortifications; but by the peace of Ryſwick, in 1697, it was reſtored to Spain in the condition it then was. It was again taken by the French in 1701, and by the barrier treaty it was ceded to the States general; but in 1715, it was reſtored to the emperor, whoſe troops took poſſeſſion of it the 16th of January, 1715. It was in agitation to erect Luxemburg into a biſhopric, in the 16th century, when Philip II. eſtabliſhed ſo many dioceſes in the Netherlands, and to have annexed the abby of Orval to its revenues; but at the earneſt ſolicitation of the archbiſhop of Treves, whoſe ſpiritual juriſdiction extends over the city, and great part of the province of Luxemburg, the deſign was laid aſide. The river Alſitz runs through it, and divides it into Upper Town and Lower; the former ſituated on a rock, the latter in a plain: the fortifications of it were thought to be almoſt the ſtrongeſt in Europe. Luxemburg was blockaded by the French, as ſoon as they had made themſelves maſters of the ſurrounding country, and ſurrendered to them on the 7th of June, 1795, by capitulation. The garriſon were allowed the honours of war, and were to be conducted to the right ſide of the Rhine, but under an oath not to ſerve againſt the republic till regularly exchanged. The garriſon conſiſted of 10,000 men, commanded by the celebrated marſhal Bender. They appear not to have experienced a want of proviſions or ſtores; but the hopeleſſneſs of ſuccour, and the near approaches of the beſiegers, ſeem to have determined the general who commanded them to put a ſtop to the fruitleſs effuſion of blood. The ſurrender of Luxemburg put the French in poſſeſſion of the whole country on the left of the Rhine, except Mentz: 50 miles SSE. Liege, and 16 SW. Treves. Long. 23. 34. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 50. LYME, a river of England, which for ſome diſtance divides the county of Dorſet from Devonſhire, and runs into the ſea, near the town of Lyme.

LYME, or Lyme Regis, a ſea-port town of England, ſituated on the coaſt of Dorſetſhire, near the borders of Devonſhire. It is governed by a mayor, a recorder, burgeſſes, &c. and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. It has a weekly market on Friday: 30 miles E. Exeter, and 143 WSW. London. Long. 2. 56. W. Greenwich. Lat. 50. 39. N.

LYMFIORD, or Lymfurt, a gulf of Denmark, near the weſt coaſt of North Jutland, which communicates with the Scaggerac, and runs eighty miles inland, widening gradually, and forming ſeveral inlands, it is ſeparated from the north ſea only by a narrow bank.

LYMINGTON, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Hants, with a harbour for veſſels of conſiderable burden. It is a corporation town, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. The town is ſituated about a mile from the channel which runs between the main land of England, and the iſland of Wight, the tide flows about a mile beyond the town. The chief trade is making ſalt, which is ſent to all the ſouth parts of England, by land and water. It has a weekly market on Saturday: 17 miles SW. Southampton, and 97 SW. London. Long. 1. 33. W. Greenwich. Lat. 50. 43. N.

LYNCH, a town of United America, in the ſtate of South Carolina: 11 miles S. George Town.

LYNDALS, a river of Norway, which runs into the ſea, 10 miles NNW. Chriſtianſand.

LYNE, or Lynne, a river of Scotland, which runs into the Tweed, at Lyne, in Peebleſhire.

LYNE, a river of England, which runs into the Trent, near Nottingham.

LYNN, or Lynn Regis, or King's Lynn, a town of England, in the county of Norfolk, ſituated about ten miles from the German Sea, on the eaſtern bank of the river Ouſe, which forms a good harbour, and is divided by four ſmall rivers, over which there are fifteen bridges, and at the north end of the town is a platform of twelve cannon, called St. Ann's Fort. King John made it a free borough for its fidelity, during his wars with the barons, and Henry III. granted it a mayor for the ſame reaſon. It is governed by a mayor, aldermen, high ſteward, recorder, &c, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. The harbour is capable of containing 300 merchants' ſhips, and ſometimes a ſtrong wind will drive the ſhips from their moorings. The ſituation of this town, near the fall of the Ouſe into the ſea, gives it an opportunity of extending its trade into eight different counties; ſo that it ſupplies many conſiderable cities and towns, with heavy goods, not only of our own produce, but ſuch as are imported from abroad. Its trade in wine and coals is ſuch, that from 90,000 to 100,000 chaldrons of coals, are brought annually into this port: and the annual importation of wine is more than two thouſand pipes. It appeared, by the report made by the commiſſioners for auditing the public accompts in the year 1784, that the annual duties amounted to more than thoſe at any other port in the kingdom, except London, Briſtol, Liverpool, and Hull. The trade of this town in corn is extremely large; and in iron, deals, timber, and other kinds of merchandiſe, is very conſiderable. Its foreign trade is very conſiderable, eſpecially to Holland, Norway, the Baltic, Spain, and Portugal, and formerly they drove a good trade to France, till it was turned off, by treaties on one hand, and by prohibitions, high duties, &c. on the other, to Spain and Portugal. In the year 1643, the parliamentary forces beſieged the town; the ſiege began on the 28th of Auguſt, and continued till the 16th of September, when it was ſurrendered; and to preſerve it from plunder, was obliged to pay to every foot ſoldier of the beſieging army, under the command of the earl of Mancheſter, ten ſhillings, and to every foot officer, under the rank of a captain, a fortnight's pay, amounting in all to the ſum of 3200l. after which it was made a garriſon-town for the parliament. Preparatory to the reſtoration of Charles II. it was fortified a-freſh by ſir Horatio Townſhend. Two markets are held weekly on Tueſday and Saturday: 44 miles WNW. Norwich, and 106 N. London. Long. 0. 23. E. Greenwich. Lat. 52. 45. N.

LYNN, a river of England, which runs into the Ouſe, at Lynn Regis.

LYNN, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Maſſachuſetts: 5 miles NE. Boſton. Long. 70. 55. W. Greenwich. Lat. 42. 33. N.

LYON, a river of Scotland, which riſes in Loch Lyon, on the ſouth-weſt part of the county of Perth, and runs into the Tay: 2 miles ENE. Kenmore.

LYONS, a city of France, and capital of the department of the Rhône and Loire; before the revolution, the capital of a province called Lyonnois, ſituated at the conflux of the Rhône and Saône. This city was founded ten years before the birth of Chriſt, by Lucius Munatius Plancus, and peopled by a colony of Romans who had been driven from Vienne by the Allobroges. In the 5th century, Lyons was taken by the Burgundians, whoſe king became feudatory to Clovis. The ſons of Clovis afterwards deſtroyed the power of the Burgundians, and rendered themſelves maſters of Lyons. In the diviſion of the dominions of Louis the Debonnaire, Lyons, with the greateſt part of Burgundy, came to Lothaire. Lyons is the ſecond city of France, in point of ſize and population, but ſuperior to Paris in trade, commerce, and manufactures, containing about 150,000 ſouls. They reckon eleven pariſhes, ſix gates, and four fauxbourgs, and it is divided into thirty-five quarters, named Penonages. It was the ſee of an archbiſhop, who was primate of France, and had formerly great political power over the Lyonnois. The cathedral church was a vaſt Gôthic building, yet majeſtic in its appearance. The town-houſe is eſteemed one of the moſt beautiful in Europe; other public buildings were, before the revolution, four abbys, fifty convents, three public ſchools, a college of phyſic, two general hoſpitals, &c. Here were, beſides, an academy of arts and ſciences and belles-lettres, a ſociety of agriculture, a veterinary ſchool, a theatre, public library, ſeventy companies of tradeſmen and artiſts, three forts, an arſenal well ſupplied, and arranged with care, magnificent quays, &c. The trade is immenſe with Spain, Italy, Swiſſerland, Germany, Holland, England, &c. From Spain, they receive wool, ſilk, drugs, piaſtres, and ingots of gold and ſilver; in return for cloth, linen, fuſtian, ſaffron, paper, &c. To Italy, they ſend cloth, linen, ſilk ſtuffs, lace, books, mercery, and millenery, and receive in return ſilk, velvet, damaſk, ſatins, taffaties, and rice. To Swiſſerland, they ſend coarſe cloth, hats, ſaffron, wine, oil, ſoap, and mercery; and receive from thence cheeſe, linen, and, in war time, horſes. The great towns of Germany purchaſe from Lyons, beſides the ſame merchandize as the Swiſs, ſtuffs of gold and ſilver. From Holland, Lyons takes more merchandize than it ſends in return. The inhabitants carry on a very conſiderable trade with the other parts of France. Early in the French revolution, an union was formed between the towns of Lyons, Marſeilles and Toulon, under the title of Federal Republicaniſm, contrary to the general ſenſe of the nation, which was for a republic one and indiviſible. Lyons contained a great number of diſaffected citizens of every claſs, Royaliſts and Girondiſts, and was declared to be in a ſtate of rebellion. After a ſiege of two months, in which the Lyoneſe were computed to have loſt 2000 men, and great part of the city was reduced to aſhes, the city ſurrendered. The chiefs of the rebels had fled, but ſeveral of them were afterwards taken and executed. By a decree of the convention, the walls and public buildings of Lyons, were ordered to be deſtroyed, and the name of the city itſelf to be changed to that of Ville Affranchie; this decree was afterwards repealed: 57¼ poſts SSE. Paris. Long. 22. 29. E. Ferro. Lat. 45. 46. N.

LYONNOIS, before the revolution, a province of France, ſituated on the weſt ſide of the Saône and Loire, about 30 miles in length, and 17 in breadth. The principal places were Lyons, Tarare, La Breſle, St. Chamont, Condrieu, and Ance. Lyonnois, as a government, included alſo the Beaujelois and Forez, all now included in the department of the Rhône and Loire.

MACAO, a town of Portugal, in the province of Eſtremadura: 4 leagues NE. Abantes, and 11 SW. Caſtel-Branco.

MACAO, a ſeaport of China, in the province of Quang-tong. This town is built on a peninſula, or rather on a ſmall iſland, becauſe it is ſeparated from the land by a river, where the ebbing and flowing of the tide are ſenſibly felt. This tongue of land is joined to the reſt of the iſland only by a ſmall neck, encloſed by a wall. The Portugueſe obtained this port as a reward for the aſſiſtance they gave the Chineſe, againſt a celebrated pirate, who infeſted the neighbouring ſeas, and had laid ſiege to the capital of the province. They compelled him to retreat to Macao, where he was taken and put to death. They fortified the place, ſurrounded it with ſtrong walls, and in a manner became maſters of it. Macao has a Portugueſe governor, and a Chineſe mandarin; the palace of the latter is in the middle of the city; the nation of the former pays a tribute of 100,000 ducats, for the liberty of chooſing their own magiſtrates, exerciſing their religion, and living according to their own laws. The houſes here are built after the European manner, but they are low and make little ſhow. The city is defended by three forts, built upon eminences; its works are good, and well planted with artillery. Long. 3. 19. E. Peking. Lat. 22. 12. N.

MACAS, a town of Africa, in the kingdom of Hoval, near the mouth of the Senegal.

MACAS, a town of South America, which gives name to a juriſdiction in the audience of Quito, containing eight other towns. Macas contains about 130 houſes, and 1200 inhabitants, Spaniards and Meſtizos. Its ancient name was Sevilla del Oro. At the conqueſt, and for ſome time after, this country was very populous, and, in honour of the great riches drawn from its capital, was diſtinguiſhed by the name of Sevilla del Oro; but at preſent only the memory of its former opulence remains. Such an extreme declenſion proceeded from an inſurrection of the natives, who, after ſwearing allegiance to the king of Spain, took arms and made themſelves maſters of the city of Logrono, and a town called Guamboya, both in the ſame juriſdiction, and very rich. Theſe devaſtations have ſo diſcouraged any farther ſettlement there, that the whole country lies as a waſte; no money goes current in it, and the only way the wretched inhabitants have to provide themſelves with neceſſaries, is by bartering their home products. The nearneſs of Macas to the Cordillera of the Andes, cauſes a ſenſible difference betwixt its temperature and that of Quito: for though it be alſo a woody country, the diverſity betwixt the two moſt diſtant ſeaſons of the year is manifeſt; and as its territory is different from that of the juriſdiction of Quito, ſo the variety in the periods of the ſeaſon is alſo great. Thus winter begins here in April, and laſts till September, which is the time of ſummer betwixt the Cordilleras: and at Macas the fine ſeaſon is in September. In grains, and other products which require a hot and moiſt temperature, the country is very fruitful: but one of the chief occupations of the country people here, is the culture of tobacco, which being of an excellent kind, is exported in rolls all over Peru. Sugar-canes alſo thrive well here, and conſequently cotton. Among the infinite variety of trees which crowd the woods of this country, one of the moſt remarkable is the ſtorax. This territory alſo produces cinnamon-trees, which is ſaid to be of a ſuperior quality to that of Ceylon, here known by the name of Spaniſh cinnamon. Great quantities of copal are brought from Macas, and wild wax, but the latter of little value, as it never indurates, and the ſmell of it, when made into candles, and theſe lighted, is very ſtrong and diſagreeable. Long. 0. 40. MADAGASCAR, a large iſland in the Indian Sea, ſeparated from the continent of Africa by a channel, about 90 leagues acroſs in its narroweſt part, called The Channel of Moçambique, or Moſambique. This iſland is rather more than 800 miles in length, and from 120 to 200 in breadth. It is divided into 28 provinces, and watered by a great number of conſiderable rivers, which form at their mouths many bays and gulfs, in which are found good roads and harbours. The firſt European who diſcovered this iſland, was Lawrence Almeida, a Portugueſe, in the year 1506. The inhabitants of Madagaſcar are divided into a number of tribes; the number is eſtimated at upwards of four millions. The natives are called Malegaches. They are portly in their perſons, and riſe above the middle ſtature. The colour of the ſkin is different: among one tribe it is of a deep black, among another tawny: ſome have a copper coloured tint: but the colour of the greater part is olive. All thoſe who are black have woolly hair, like the negroes on the coaſt of Africa. Thoſe who are of a complexion ſimilar to that of the Indians and Mulattoes, have as lank hair as the Europeans. Their noſe is not flat; they have a broad open forehead; their lips are thin; and their features are regular and agreeable. Theſe people generally diſplay in their countenance a peculiar character of frankneſs and good-nature. They never ſhow any deſire of learning but things which relate to the ſimpleſt wants of mankind; and this deſire is always extremely moderate: they are very indifferent reſpecting knowledge, which cannot be obtained without reflection. A natural want of care, and a general apathy, renders every thing inſupportable to them that requires attention. Sober, light, and active, they ſpend the greater part of their lives in ſleeping, and in amuſing themſelves. The Malegache, like the ſavage, is deſtitute both of virtue and vice. To him the preſent is every thing; he is ſuſceptible of no kind of foreſight; and he does not even conceive, that there are men on the earth who give themſelves uneaſineſs reſpecting futurity. Some of them are not entirely ignorant of the art of writing. They have even ſome hiſtorical books in the Madecaſe language: but their learned men, whom they call Ombiaſſes, uſe only the Arabic characters. They have among them treatiſes on medicine, geomancy, and judicial aſtrology. The Ombiaſſes profeſs, in the public ſchools, geomancy and aſtrology. The art of writing has, doubtleſs, been brought into this iſland by the Arabs, who made a conqueſt of it about 300 years ago. Their paper is made in the vally of Amboule. The Arabic language has made ſome progreſs in the north-weſt part of the iſland of Madagaſcar. It is well known, that the Arab princes formed large eſtabliſhments along the African coaſt, which, according to geographers, correſpond with the kingdoms of Monomotapa and Mono-Emugi. Some of the whites, who inhabit the province of Anoſſi and Carcanoſſi, pretend to be deſcended from Imina, the mother of Mahomet, others are ſprung, ſome from the pirates, and others from the Jews: for this reaſon they call themſelves Zaffe-Hibrahim, that is to ſay, the deſcendants of Abraham. Beſides theſe, there is alſo a kind of whites, who ſay they were ſent to Madagaſcar by the caliph of Mecca, to inſtruct the Malegaches in the ſecrets of nature, and the religion of Mahomet. While the Malegaches are at war, their women ſing and dance inceſſantly, throughout the whole day, and even during a part of the night. They imagine that theſe continual dances animate their huſbands, and increaſe their vigour and courage. They ſcarcely allow themſelves time to enjoy their meal: when the war is ended, they aſſemble at ſunſet, and renew their ſinging and dancing, which always begin with much noiſe, and the ſound of various inſtruments. The chief ſettlement on the ſouthern coaſt of Madagaſcar is Fort Dauphin. The place moſt frequented by the Europeans in the northern part of Madagaſcar is called Foulepointe, but the natives give it the name of Voulou-Voulu. The harbour is ſurrounded by a reef of rocks, which breaks the force of the waves, and ſhelters ſhips from heavy ſeas. The ſhores of it are very bold, and the leaſt depth of the water is twenty-three feet, at low water. Ships can procure at Foulepointe, proviſions of every kind in abundance, and at a low price. The markets are well ſupplied when commerce experiences no check or reſtraint on the part of the Europeans. The French claim the honour of firſt diſcovering the maritime countries between the Bay of Antongil and the Bay of St. Auguſtin, although the Portugueſe, in all their voyages to the Eaſt Indies, have conſtantly, ſince the year 1506, anchored in this iſland, and improved their diſcoveries. The Dutch have followed their example; yet neither have penetrated ſo far into the country as the French. Great quantities of iron and ſteel are found throughout this iſland, which their artificers forge and purify, with little difficulty and labour. There are in Madagaſcar three ſorts of gold: the country gold, called malacaſſa, pale, and as eaſy to be caſt as lead; an ounce of which is worth no more than twenty florins. The rivers and brooks are rich in various kinds of precious ſtones, in cryſtal, topazes, granites, amethyſts, eagle-ſtones, emeralds, ſapphires, hyacinths, jaſpers, and blood-ſtones, called by the natives rhahamanga, cornelians, and touchſtones. The productions of the iſland are ſeveral ſorts of rice and barley, bananas, ananas, melons, ſugar-canes, white pepper, ginger, cocoa-nuts, ſaffron, indigo, gum benzoin, tacamahac, and ſeveral other kinds of gums, five different kinds of honey, and a great variety of plants, unknown to Europeans. Among the multitude of trees, the moſt remarkable is the raven, a kind of palm-tree, known only in Madagaſcar. This tree, the top part of which is prepared and eaten in the ſame manner as that of the cabbage-palm, riſes to a great height. It is covered with a hard bark, and its wood, which is fibrous and hard, is employed for conſtructing houſes. The walls and partitions of theſe houſes are formed of the ribs of its leaves, which have the ſolidity of wood, and the pliability of leather, and which are faſtened together in a very ingenious manner. The leaves ſerve to cover them; and this covering, which laſts a long time, is preferable to our thatch. It is of the leaves of the raven, alſo, that the Madecaſſes make their plates, diſhes, and cups. Theſe veſſels are always clean, but they are never uſed more than once. Under the membranous covering, which incloſes the flowers of this palm, is found a gummy ſubſtance, of an exquiſite taſte, which one would take to be honey. It is not ſurpriſing, that the Madecaſſes endeavour to be ſurrounded by a tree ſo uſeful. They make very large planks of it by ſplitting it from the one end to the other. Theſe planks, however, muſt be ſtraightened the moment they are ſplit. The rivers are filled with crocodiles; Mr. Rochon ſays, he one day ſaw an ox dragged away and devoured by one of theſe monſters. The iſland of Madagaſcar abounds with different kinds of quadruped animals, inſects, birds, and fiſh. There are three ſorts of cattle; one kind horned, another with round heads, without horns, called boury, and a third kind, whoſe horns are looſe and hanging down, and faſtened only to the ſkin of the head; all of them having large quantities of fat, contained in great bunches or ſwellings, which the natives melt and uſe for butter, the taſte being very agreeable. Buffaloes likewiſe run in herds. There are great numbers of goats and kids. The mutton is extremely fine taſted, and there is a kind of ſheep whoſe large and flat tails weigh twenty or twenty-five pounds. The woods are inhabited by great numbers of wild boars. Various kinds of monkies and baboons are found in the different provinces, but neither elephants, tygers, lions, or horſes. Inſects are numerous. The famocantraton, or breaſt-leaper, is an extraordinary but dangerous inſect, of the ſize of a ſmall lizard, which fixes itſelf, as if glued, to the barks of trees, with its mouth open for catching ſpiders, flies, and other inſects. They leap on the breaſts of thoſe who approach the tree where they are, and cannot be got rid of but by cutting away the fleſh on which they are fixed. There are numbers of cameleons, rats, mice, and water-rats. Mandouts is a kind of ſerpent, as large as the arm or leg of a man, not venomous, though deemed ſo by the natives: it feeds on bats and ſmall birds: there are ſcorpions, moth-worms, ear-wigs, bugs, and many inſects, troubleſome to mankind. The inhabitants generally apply with great diligence to agriculture, have little knowledge of commerce, and no improvements in inventions of arts and trades like Europeans, or in diſcovering the natural produce, that might invite ſtrangers to their country: they even neglect making ſilk, and preſerving the worms they have ſuch plenty of. Their labour extends only to the neceſſities of living, proviſions, apparel, and habitations, for they contemn ſuperfluities. Their chief employment is in buildings, gold and iron works, and in poliſhing, making earthen ware, ſpinning, weaving, cordage, fiſhing, hunting, and moſtly in agriculture. Some make all ſorts of iron and ſteel implements hatchets, hammers, ſhovels, razors, nippers, knives, &c. Polygamy is practiſed throughout the iſland, every man enjoying a plurality of wives, in proportion to his fortune. The women, eſpecially incontinent, are never deſtitute of friends. Their marriage-ceremonies are called miracheibe; the negroes practiſe none, and the whites, or Zaferanimi, obſerve them only on the wedding-day of their chief wife. At funerals, the neareſt relations waſh the body of the deceaſed, which they adorn with bracelets, rings, and chains of gold, ſet with coral and other ornaments, wrap it in ſeveral exceedingly fine cloths, and carry it in a mat to the tomb. The cuſtom of expoſing their children to a certain, though indeterminate, manner of death, appears to be the moſt dreadful of all the barbarous and execrable ſuperſtitions practiſed by the natives of Madagaſcar. The ordinary food of theſe iſlanders conſiſt of rice, beans, or peas, various ſorts of yams, oils, fruit, cabbages, beef, mutton, goats, poultry, fiſh, and porcupines. Hog's fleſh is only eaten by hunters and their families; and ginger, green leaves, garlic, and white pepper, compoſe their ſauces. The ſame language is ſpoken throughout the iſland, but differently pronounced in different provinces, long and ſhort, of great affinity with the Oriental, chiefly Arabic, and agreeably to the Greek in the manner of ſpeaking, in the order and conjunction of the nouns, and verbs active, and extremely copious. The inhabitants of this great iſland have but little knowledge of commerce, they exchange amongſt themſelves goods for goods; gold and ſilver coins imported by Europeans are immediately melted down for bracelets, earrings, and other ornaments, and no currency of coin is eſtabliſhed: thoſe in want of cotton carry rice and cattle into the cotton countries, and others in want of rice and cattle bring cotton into the plentiful provinces: their traffic chiefly conſiſts in the exchange of the produce of one province for that of another; and ſometimes they exchange gold and ſilver for copper and iron. Long. 59. to 66. MADEIRA, an iſland in the Atlantic, and the principal of a group called the Madeiras, about 150 miles in circumference, of a triangular form, ſo called by the Portugueſe, from its being, when firſt they landed on it, covered with wood. The diſcovery is generally attributed to the Portugueſe; but a tradition was formerly held among the natives, that an Engliſhman, of the name of Macham, who had married a lady of immenſe fortune, embarked at Briſtol, in the year 1342, for France, and was driven by a ſtorm to this iſland. However, the moſt probable and beſt atteſted account is, that the Portugueſe did not become acquainted with Madeira before the year 1431, when Don Henry firſt ſent a colony thither, under the conduct of Triſtan Teſſora and Gonzales, or Gonzalvo Zarco, who were nominated governors alternately, or, as others affirm, of different parts of the iſland. Upon this partition of power, it was divided into two provinces, Machicho and Funchal: the new coloniſts immediately ſet to work in clearing the ground, and for this purpoſe ſet fire to the foreſts, which burnt with ſuch violence, that the governor and people were forced to ſeek protection from the flames in the ſea, in which they had almoſt periſhed before they were taken up by a ſhip. So abundant was the fuel, and fierce the flames, that this fire continued, we are told, for near ſeven years; in conſequence of which, the ſoil was ſo enriched by the wood aſhes, that for a long time it produced one hundred fold; though we are told, this increaſe is diminiſhed to twenty-five times the quantities of grain ſown, or ſugar-canes planted. The climate is more temperate than the Canaries, and the ſoil more fertile in wine, ſugar, and fruits, but leſs ſo in corn, though infinitely better watered with ſpings and rivers, the number of which is infinite. As to cattle, birds, plants, and trees, they are nearly ſimilar, each produces the ſanguis draconis, maſtick, and other gums. The onions here are ſo mild and ſweet, that they are eaten raw like apples. Lemons grow to a large ſize, and oranges are produced ſpontaneouſly, of all ſorts and dimenſions; beſides all the European fruits, peaches, nectarines, melons, apricots, pears, apples, with a variety of others. In Madeira are made the fineſt ſweetmeats in the world, all kinds of fruits being here candied in the moſt exquiſite perfection. In the Madeiras, ſugar-works were firſt erected in the weſt, of which it had an incredible number, and from thence they were removed to America; ſoon after which, the Portugueſe, finding the demand for their ſugars ſink, converted their cane plantations into vineyards: which appears to be a better reaſon, than that of the poverty of the ſoil. The exports of wines, and the profits on them, are immenſe, and produce a large revenue to the crown of Portugal. Theſe wines are of different kinds, different both in taſte, colour, and ſtrength. Funchal is the capital.

MADELA, a town of Aſia, in Paleſtine: 192 miles SE. Jeruſalem.

MADELY, a town of England, in Shropſhire, formerly a place of trade, but ruined in the civil wars, and the market diſcontinued till the year 1763; it has been renewed, but removed a conſiderable diſtance from the ancient market-place, to near the iron bridge in Colebrook Dale. The town contains about 100 houſes: 8 miles NNW. Bridgenorth, and 147 NW. London.

MADRAS, or Fort St. George, called by the natives China patam, a town of Hindooſtan, ſituated on the coaſt of Coromandel, built in the reign of Charles II. by order of the Engliſh Eaſt India Company, under the ſuperintendence of ſir William Langhorne. It is built in a plain ſandy ſituation, ſo cloſe to the ſea, that its walls have ſometimes been endangered by the beating of the ſurges. Behind, it is defended by a ſalt-water river, which adds to its ſecurity, but takes away from its conveniency, by obſtructing all freſh-water ſprings. This inconvenience obliges the inhabitants to ſend above a mile for water that is drinkable. In the rainy ſeaſon, the ſea threatens deſtruction on one ſide, while the river is no leſs terrifying on the other, from the apprehenſion of an inundation. The ſun, from April to September, is ſcorching hot, and, without the ſea breezes to moiſten and cool the air, the place would not be habitable. About the city, the ſoil is ſo poor, dry, and ſandy, that it produces not a blade of graſs ſpontaneouſly, nor corn with culture. The roots, herbage, and other vegetables, conſumed in the place, are brought from a conſiderable diſtance. In ſhort, nothing can be more unhappy than the aſpect, more diſagreeable or leſs commodious than the ſituation; yet, under all theſe diſadvantages, it is the company's head ſettlement, and, next to Batavia, the richeſt European port in India. The fort lies north-north-eaſt and ſouth-ſouth-weſt, in the middle of the White or Engliſh Town. It is a regular ſquare, about a hundred yards on each ſide. The White Town, where the Europeans live, is about a quarter of a mile in length, and nearly half as much in breadth. To the northward of the fort are three decent ſtraight ſtreets, and an equal number to the ſouth. The houſes are flat-roofed, built with brick, and covered with a plaſter made of ſea-ſhells which no rain can penetrate. The walls are thick, and rooms lofty, but few of them exceed one floor, though ſome are raiſed a floor above ground. Oppoſite to the weſt gate of the fort is a barrack, where the company's ſoldiers lodge when off guard; and, adjoining to it, is a very convenient hoſpital, whither they are conveyed and carefully attended when ſick. At the other end of the barrack is a mint, where the company coin gold and ſilver. There is a town-houſe where the magiſtrates aſſemble, and a court of juſtice is held. The whole is encompaſſed with a ſtrong wall, of the ſame ſtone with which the fort is built. It is defended by batteries, baſtions, half-moons, and flankers: the whole mounted with near 200 pieces of cannon, and three mortars, including the guns on the outworks, beſides field-pieces. Round it, on the weſt ſide, runs the river, by which alone, and a battery, it is defended. South of the White Town is a little ſuburb, the reſidence of the black watermen, by whom it is wholly poſſeſſed. It conſiſts of little low thatched cottages, hardly deſerving the name of buildings. Beyond this, is an outguard of blacks, to give notice of any danger. In ſhort, it cannot be well attacked, except on the ſouth and north ſides; for, towards the ſea, the ſwell and ſurges are a perfect ſecurity. As to the Black Town, called Madraſs, and ſometimes Chinapatam, it is inhabited by Gentoos, Mohammetans, and Indian Chriſtians, as Armenians and Portugueſe; nor is it without a number of Jews. The wall is of brick, ſeventeen feet thick, with baſtions at proper diſtances, after the modern rules of fortification. It has alſo a river on the weſt, and the ſea on the eaſt. To the north, a canal is cut from the river to the ſea, which ſerves for a moat on that ſide. The town is a mile and a half in circumference, and might be reckoned a place of ſtrength, if the garriſon were always proportioned. Indeed, the accident that befel the company, in the war with the French, has made them more attentive to its ſecurity. The fortifications have received great improvements; a body of national troops, as well as of the company's ſoldiers, are generally in garriſon, at leaſt in time of war; nor are ſtores, proviſions, or any other neceſſaries, wanting for its defence and ſecurity. In the Black Town, the ſtreets are wide, with trees planted in ſome of them, which afford ſhelter from the piercing beams of the ſun. Some of the houſes are of brick; the reſt miſerable cottages. The town is, in general, very populous; one of thoſe little mean cottages containing ſeven, eight, or ten in a family; yet, with all this appearance of poverty, few places abound more in wealth, ready ſpecie no where circulating with greater rapidity. The bazar, or market, is every day crowded, and exchanges of property of immenſe value are made, which they transfer with the ſame facility with which it is done on the Exchange of London. Upon the whole, the inhabitants of this town have nothing poor, mean, or unclean, but the outſide aſpect; all within is neat, decent, and, if the furniture is not rich, at leaſt the landlord is generally ſo. In the Black Town ſtands an Armenian church, with ſeveral little pagodas, or Indian temples, to which belong a number of prieſts and female choriſters. Long. 80. 26. E. Greenwich. Lat. 13. 6. N.—In the month of September, 1746, this town was taken by the French. It was reſtored by the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle.

MADRID, a city and capital of Spain, on the Manzanares. This city was long only an obſcure town in New Caſtile, belonging to the archbiſhops of Toledo; but ſince the emperor Charles V. and his ſucceſſors, have choſen it for their reſidence, it is become the firſt city in Spain. It has no fortifications nor ditches, being only ſurrounded with a bad wall. There are, nevertheleſs, ſome gates, by no means anſwerable to the grandeur of the city; all theſe gates are ſhut during the night, except the gate of Segovia, and are guarded by revenue officers, to prevent contraband trade. On approaching Madrid, nothing announces to the traveller that he is near the capital of the Spaniſh monarchy. The inns, within two leagues of that city, are equally dirty, and deſtitute of all conveniencies, with thoſe in every other part of the kingdom. The ſoil appears barren, and without either trees or verdure; but, on arriving at the banks of the Manzanares, a ſuperb and, in time of floods, extremely neceſſary bridge, notifies the vicinity of the royal reſidence. Almoſt all the ſtreets of Madrid are ſtraight, wide, clean, and well paved. Madrid has alſo ſeveral ſquares, which, in general, are not very regular; the Plaza Mayor, eſpecially, deſerves notice for its ſpacíouſneſs and regularity, and the elegant and lofty houſes it contains. It is fifteen hundred and thirty-ſix feet in circuit. The houſes, of which there are a hundred and thirty-ſix, are of five ſtories, ornamented with balconies, the firſt of which, ſupported by pillars, form a piazza round the ſquare, where the inhabitants may walk under cover. In the middle of the ſquare a market is kept. The ſtreets and ſquares of Madrid, except the Plaza Mayor, are ornamented with fountains, in a very ill taſte. The water of all theſe fountains is excellent; and the air of Madrid, though the weather be variable and uncertain, extremely pure. It was this purity of the air, and excellent quality of the water, which induced Charles V. and his ſucceſſors, to fix their reſidence in this city. The auto da fés were formerly celebrated in this ſquare, with all their terrible apparatus. It is ſtill the theatre of bull-fights, which are given at the royal feaſts. The city of Madrid contains fifteen gates, eighteen pariſhes, thirty-five convents of monks, and thirty-one of nuns, thirty-nine colleges, hoſpitals, or houſes of charity, 7398 dwelling-houſes, and 160,000 inhabitants. The environs of Madrid preſent the traveller with nothing agreeable, except the banks of the Manzanares, where he finds ſhade, coolneſs, and verdure. There are four academies in Madrid. The firſt is the Spaniſh Academy, founded in 1714, in imitation of the French academy, and conſiſting of twenty-four members, including the preſident. Its firſt object was the compilation of a dictionary of the Spaniſh language, which was publiſhed in ſix volumes folio. The ſecond is the academy of hiſtory, which owes its origin to a ſociety of individuals, the object of whoſe meetings was to preſerve and illuſtrate the hiſtorical monuments of the kingdom of Spain. Their labours met the approbation of Philip V. who, in 1738, confirmed their ſtatutes by a royal cedula. This academy conſiſts of twenty-four members, including the preſident, ſecretary, and cenſor. The other academies are, the academy of the fine arts, painting, ſculpture, architecture, and the academy of medicine. The latter is held in no great eſteem. Long. 12. 44. E. MADRID (New), a town of North America, in Louiſiana, intended as the capital of a new ſettlement, on the weſtern ſide of the river Miſſiſippi, oppoſite the mouth of the Ohio. The ſpot on which the city is to be built, is called New Madrid, after the capital of Spain. This ſettlement, which is without the limits of the United States, in the Spaniſh dominions, is conducted by colonel Morgan, under the patronage of the Spaniſh king. The ſettlers are to form their own conſtitution, make their own laws (provided they do not counteract the laws of Spain) chooſe their own magiſtrates and civil officers, and are to enjoy free toleration in religion. They are, however, to be ſubjects to the king of Spain. As an encouragement to ſettlers, they are to be indulged with ſome peculiar commercial privileges. New Madrid, from its local ſituation and adventitious privileges, is in proſpect of being the great emporium of the weſtern country, unleſs the free navigation of the Miſſiſippi ſhould be opened to the United States. And even ſhould this deſired event take place, which probably will not, without a rupture with Spain, this muſt be a place of great trade. For here will naturally centre the immenſe quantities of produce that will be borne down the Illinois, the Miſſiſippi, the Ohio, and their various branches; and if the carriers can find as good a market for their cargoes here, as at New Orleans or the Weſt Indies, and can procure the articles they deſire, they will gladly ſave themſelves the difficulties and dangers of the navigation of the Miſſiſippi. New Madrid is 1040 miles from the mouth of the Miſſiſippi. Long. 89. 50. W. Greenwich. Lat. 30. 36. N.

MAELSTROM, a whirlpool in the North Sea, near the iſland of Moſkoe. This whirlpool is heard to the diſtance of ſeveral leagues, being ſo violent, that if a ſhip comes near it, the veſſel will be drawn irreſiſtibly into the vortex, and immediately carried to the bottom, where it is daſhed to pieces againſt the rocks. When it is a flood, the ſtream runs up the country, with a boiſterous rapidity; and when it is ebb, it returns to the ſea, with a violence and noiſe that is unequalled by the loudeſt cataracts. Whatever is carried down by it, is inſtantly abſorbed, and, at the turn of ebb and flood, when the water becomes ſtill for about quarter of an hour, the ſcattered fragments aſcend to the ſurface, but in ſuch a condition as ſcarcely to be known for the parts of a ſhip. When the whirlpool has at any time been agitated by a ſtorm, it has reached veſſels to the diſtance of five or ſix Engliſh miles, when the crews thought themſelves to be in perfect ſecurity. Long. 10. 40. MAESEYK, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and biſhopric of Liege, on the Meuſe. In the year 1567, the inhabitants opened the gates to the revolters, and received a miniſter of the reformed religion; but Cardinal de Groeſbeeck, biſhop of Liege, inveſted the place, and compelled them to ſurrender, a ſhort time after. It ſuffered very much during the ſucceſſive wars, particularly in 1675, when the French deſtroyed the fortifications: 30 miles NNE. Liege. Long. 23. 18. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 9. N.

MAESLAND, or Maeſland Sluys, a town of Holland, ſituated on a canal, which forms a communication between Delft and the Meuſe. The principal part of the inhabitants are engaged in the herring and whale fiſhery: 7 miles S. Delft, and 10 W. Rotterdam.

MAESTRICHT, one of the largeſt and moſt ancient towns of the Netherlands, belonged formerly to the duchy of Lorrain. In 1530, the emperor Charles V. ſecured the poſſeſſion of it at the diet of Augſburg, and united it to the duchy of Brabant, although it is inſulated in the biſhopric of Liege. The magiſtracy is compoſed of two burgomaſters, one a catholic, the other a proteſtant, and twenty echevins, half catholics and half proteſtants. It was formerly a biſhop's ſee; for Tongres having been deſtroyed by the barbarians, St. Servais, who was preſent at the council held at Cologn in the year 346, transferred the ſee to Maeſtricht, which continued to the year 710, when St. Hubert removed it to Liege, and fixed the cathedral on the ſpot where St. Lambert had been martyred. There are two collegiate and ſeveral pariſh churches, beſides ſeveral religious houſes; the town-houſe is a very handſome building, and has a good library. The city revolted from Spain in the year 1570; and in the year 1579, the prince of Parma beſieged and took it on the 29th of June, by a poſt ill defended, after a ſiege of four months; when it was pillaged and ſacked, and above 8000 perſons miſerably periſhed. The ſiege was long and bloody, but at length the town ſurrendered by capitulation, and obtained the moſt honourable conditions. In the year 1634, the marquis d'Aytone, general of the Spaniſh troops, after being diſappointed in his deſign on Limburg, came to inveſt Maeſtricht: the duke of Bouillon, governor of the city, had thrown himſelf and 4000 men into the place, and made ſuch furious ſallies on the beſiegers, that the marquis was compelled to turn the ſiege into a blockade; but on receiving conſiderable reinforcements, he began his approaches, and to batter the town; but all his efforts gave little inquietude to the prince of Orange, who relied on the courage of the garriſon, and the ſkill and good conduct of the duke; but to make a diverſion in favour of Maeſtricht, the prince reſolved to inveſt Breda; which ſo alarmed the Spaniſh general, that he immediately raiſed the ſiege of Maeſtricht, and marched all his forces to Breda, on which the prince retired, on the 8th of September, with his army, in good order; while the marquis d'Aytone, to hide his chagrin at being overreached by the prince's artifice, entered Breda with the airs of a conqueror. January 30, 1673, Louis XIV. king of France, inveſted it in perſon with a numerous army, and, though furniſhed with a garriſon of 6000 foot and 1100 horſe, under the command of M. de Fariaux, afterwards vicomte de Maude, an officer of great reputation, it ſurrendered after a ſiege of thirteen days. In the year 1676, the prince of Orange, being reinforced by the army of the duke of Villa Hermoſa and the comte of Waldeck, attempted to retake it; he employed the choiceſt of his troops, both infantry and cavalry, who fought on foot: he had already gained the counterſcarp, and was preparing to ſtorm the place, though repulſed three times: the beſieged made a brave defence, animated by the example of Francis Calvo, a Catalan, commander of the city in the abſence of marechal d'Eſtrades, at that time attending the conference at Nimmegen. Calvo told the engineers, that he did not underſtand the defence of places, but that he would fight to the laſt drop of his blood; diſeaſe had made great havoc in the prince's army, the marechal de Schomberg was advancing to the relief of the place; theſe circumſtances, all united together, compelled the prince to abandon the enterprize, after a ſiege of fifty-one days, leaving behind him part of his cannon and baggage, with the loſs of upwards of 8000 men. The prince was wounded in the hand, and the rhyngrave was killed in the ſiege. By the peace of Nimmegen, Maeſtricht was reſtored to the Dutch, and accordingly they took poſſeſſion of it, the 6th of November, 1768. – At the ſame time, the towns of Dalem, Fauquemont, and other places, were ceded to the Dutch, on condition that the Roman Catholics might be allowed the free exerciſe of their religion. In the year 1748, Maeſtricht was again inveſted by the French, on the 3d day of April. Theſe hoſtilities were ſuddenly ſuſpended, in conſequence of the preliminaries ſigned at Aix-la-Chapelle. The plenipotentiaries agreed, that, for the glory of his Chriſtian majeſty's arms, the town of Maeſtricht ſhould be ſurrendered to his general, on condition that it ſhould be reſtored, with all the magazines and artillery. He accordingly took poſſeſſion of it on the 3d of May, when the garriſon marched out with all the honours of war, and a ceſſation of arms immediately enſued. Before this town revolted, in 1570, from the Spaniards, it was only environed with a ſingle wall, and ſome old faſhioned towers. When the Spaniards recovered it, they made ſome additions to the fortifications; the Dutch afterwards, upon their repoſſeſſing it, fortified it in a regular manner; and the French, while they were maſters of it, added ſome improvements to the works. The ramparts of Maeſtricht conſiſt of the old incloſure, flanked with ſmall towers and ancient baſtions. But the principal ſtrength of the place lies in ſeveral detached baſtions, ſome great, ſome ſmall, in ſeveral horn-works, and a covert-place, in ſome places double, and in others treble, the whole ſupported by a vaſt number of mines. They can form two inundations round the town, to prevent its being approached, one above, the other below the city; beſides, on the ſouth ſide of the town, towards Liege, there is a very ſtrong entrenchment, on the declivity of a hill, called Fort St. Pierre, able to hold 13,000 or 14,000 men, which, with the help of ſeveral redoubts well planted with artillery, are capable of being a great obſtruction to an army that would undertake the ſiege of the town. This fort conſiſts of a large baſtion with a very good caſemate, a counterſcarp, and two covert-ways; the whole ſupported with entrenchments which extend right and left to the inundation, formed by the little river Jeker. The ſuburb of Wyck has a rampart a quarter of a league in circumference, flanked with three large baſtions, joining to the body of the place. It has likewiſe another incloſure of earth, flanked with ſeveral baſtions, ravelins, and a good covert-way. There are likewiſe two iſles, one above and the other below the bridge, which are ſtrongly entrenched and defended with redoubts and other works. In ſhort, Maeſtricht is juſtly looked upon as one of the ſtrongeſt places in Europe. Near it are large ſtone quarries, in which are ſubterraneous paſſages of great extent, where the farmers frequently ſtore hay, corn, and other articles: 15 miles N. Liege, and 46 E. Bruſſels. Long. 23. 9. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 54. N.—On the 23d of February, 1793, this city was bombarded by the French, under general Miranda, but being attacked by general Clairfayt, on the 1ſt of March, the republicans loſt 2000 men, and 9 pieces of artillery, and were compelled to raiſe the ſiege. They were more ſucceſsful on the 4th of November, when the city was taken, and the garriſon, between 7000 and 8000 men, ſurrendered priſoners of war.

MAFFRA, a town of Portugal, in the province of Eſtremadura, containing about 1040 inhabitants, near which, in a ſandy and barren place, king John V. erected a building of extraordinary magnificence. This was done in purſuance of a vow, made in a dangerous fit of illneſs, to found a convent, for the uſe of the pooreſt friary in the kingdom. Upon enquiry, this pooreſt of convents was found at Mafra, where twelve Franciſcan lived together in a hut. The king procured from Rome the draught of a building, which ſhould far exceed the Eſcurial: 5 miles NW. Liſbon

MAGADOXA, Magadoſho, or Moldoſcho, a kingdom of Africa, ſituat along the coaſt of the Indian Sea, extending from the river Juboo, ne the equinoctial line, to beyond the fifth degree of north latitude. How f it extends to the weſtward, is but mere conjecture; though the gene rality of geographers ſcruple not to adjuſt its limits in their maps, on th ſide, rather as their fancy leads them, than upon any other probable found tion. It hath its name from its capital, ſituate in a large bay, formed by the mouth of the river of the ſame name, which, we are told, is called, by the Arabs, The Nile of Magadoxa, by reaſon of its annual overflowing. Some authors tell us, it has its ſpring-head as far as the mountains of the kingdom of Machidas; others bring it from the mountains of the Moon. The truth is, we are ſo little acquainted with thoſe inland countries, that its head is as much unknown to us as that of the Nile formerly was. However that be, we cannot but ſuppoſe its courſe to be very long, though not, perhaps, ſo winding as the other, not only by its conſiderable channel, which forms a large convenient bay a little below the capital, but likewiſe by its regular and extenſive inundations, which fertiliſe that whole country to ſuch a degree, by the numberleſs canals which are cut from it, that it produces a great quantity of wheat and barley, variety of fruits, and breeds great numbers of horſes, oxen, ſheep, and other animals. The city of Magadoxo is a place of great commerce, and vaſt reſort from the kingdoms of Aden, and other parts; whence their merchants bring cotton, ſilk, and other cloths, ſpices, and variety of drugs, which they exchange with the inhabitants for gold, ivory, wax, and other commodities. It is chiefly inhabited by Mahometans, who came and ſettled there in the time of the caliphs. The reſt of the inhabitants, for the moſt part, are become of the ſame religion; though there are yet a number of Bedouin Arabs, who ſtill follow their old heatheniſh ſuperſtitions; and farther inland, a ſtill greater number of Abyſſinian Chriſtians, ſubject or tributary to that empire. The king and his court are Mahometans; his ſubjects, of what extract ſoever (for ſome of them are white, others tawney and olive, and others quite black), all ſpeak the Arabic tongue; they are ſtout and warlike, and, among other weapons, uſe poiſoned arrows and lances. The town is ſituated in Long. 62. 30. E. Ferro; Lat. 2. N.

MAGDEBURG, a principality of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, ſurrounded by the mark of Brandenburg, the duchy of Brunſwick, the principality of Halberſtadt and Anhalt, the county of Mansfeld, and the electorate of Upper Saxony. Some parts are ſeparated from the other, and on all ſides environed by the circular counties of Upper Saxony. The country belonging to it is, for the moſt part, level. Fuel is ſcarce, but the country affords ſeveral mines of pit-coal, and is ſupplied with wood from the neighbouring province, by means of its rivers. The ſalt ſprings are of ſuch richneſs, that they are able to ſupply all Germany with that commodity. According to a computation made in 1703, the whole duchy, excluſive of that part of the county of Mansfeldt which is connected with it, contained 35 towns and 431 villages. From the year 1750 to 1756, the burials here have amounted, one year with another, to 8786; ſo that the number of its inhabitants, during thoſe years, may be eſtimated at about 330,000. The ſtates of the country conſiſt of the prelates (among whom the cathedral chapter is reckoned the firſt) the nobility, and the cities. In the 16th century, the province, by degrees, came into the reformation, and both archbiſhop Sigiſmund and the chapter eſpouſing it with great zeal, it was introduced into all parts. Except a few convents, till about the middle of the 17th century, Lutheraniſm was the only religion tolerated here; but the country falling, in that year, under the dominion of Brandenburg, great numbers of French and German calviniſt refugees were received here, and, under king Frederick William, the private exerciſe of the Roman Catholic worſhip was likewiſe tolerated at Magdeburg and Halle. The biſhopric of Magdeburg was formed out of a Benedictine convent, founded at Magdeburg, in 937, by the emperor Otho I. who, in 967, converted the ſaid convent into an archbiſhopric, to which Hilward, biſhop of Halberſtadt, ceded part of his dioceſe. In 1648, at the peace of Weſtphalia, the houſe of Brandenburg, as an indemnification to it, for ceding the poſſeſſions it had in Anterior Pomerania to Sweden, obtained, among other advantages, the reverſion of the archbiſhopric of Magdeburg, which he was to hold, on the deceaſe of the adminiſtrator Auguſtus duke of Savoy, as an independent and perpetual fief, and temporal dukedom; and, in 1680, acquired the actual poſſeſſion of it, on the demiſe of duke Auguſtus. The aſſeſſment of the duchy, in the matricula of the empire, is 43 horſe and 196 foot, or monthly 1300 florins. To the chamber at Wetzlar it pays 343 florins, 40 kruitzers. The duchy has its own regency, which, in 1714, was removed from the ſeat of the capital town of Halle to Magdeburg, and conſiſts of two ſenates. The chapter is, at preſent, excluded from any part in the government. The annual revenues of the ſovereign, ariſing from this duchy, amount to above 800,000 rixdollars. The duchy is divided into four circles; the names of the circles are, Holz, Jericho, Saale, and Luckenwalde. Magdeburg is the capital.

MAGDEBURG, a city of Germany, and capital of a principality of the ſame name, in the circle of Lower Saxony, on the Elbe. It is the ſeat of the provincial regency, the conſiſtory, the war and demeſne office, and one of the principal trading towns in all Germany. It is likewiſe a very ſtrong fortification, having, among other works, a citadel, ſeated on an iſland in the river Elbe. Magdeburg is well built, but the principal beauty of the town conſiſts in its cathedral ſquare, which is ornamented with large elegant houſes, and the area of it well paved. Among the moſt remarkable public edifices here, are the king's palace, which was anciently the reſidence of the biſhops, and in which are held the war and demeſne office, with the armoury, the governor's houſe, and the guild hall, where the regency and conſiſtory are held. The Lutheran Cathedral here, dedicated to Saint Maurice, is a ſuperb ſtructure, in the antique taſte. The Lutherans are poſſeſſed of three collegiate, and ſix parochial churches here, and a convent. The manufactures are numerous; woollen cloths and ſtuffs, ſilk ſtuffs, cottons, linen, ſtockings, hats, beautiful leathern gloves, black and yellow tobacco, roll tobacco, ſnuff, &c. Its ſituation on the Elbe, and the road here betwixt High and Low Germany, is very advantageous to its trade. Magdeburg, ſo early as the time of Charles the Great, was no inconſiderable place. In the tenth century, it was conferred, as a dowry, on Editha, conſort to the emperor Otho I. This princeſs environed it with a wall, which ſhe fortified with towers, and procured from her conſort the grant of a yearly fair to it, and likewiſe greatly promoted its improvement and welfare. In ſucceeding times, it arrived to a very great proſperity, was one of the hanſe-towns, and had a celebrated magiſtracy. Charles V. put it under the ban of the empire, for rejecting the interim, and charged Maurice, elector of Saxony, with the execution of it, who, after a ſiege, which held from the 16th of September, 1550, to the 9th of November, 1551, took it by a capitulation, in which it was ſtipulated, that the emperor ſhould be reconciled to it, and the ban revoked. In 1629, it ſuffered a blockade, from the Imperialiſts, for the ſpace of 28 weeks. In 1631, it was beſieged by them in form; and, being taken by ſtorm, ſacked, ſet on fire, and, excepting the cathedral, a convent, and ſome adjacent houſes, reduced to aſhes, with the loſs alſo of ſo many lives, that, though the number of its inhabitants was generally computed at no leſs than 20,000, only 400 freemen ſurvived this dreadful calamity. In the beginning of the year 1632, the Imperialiſts withdrew, and the Swedes, taking poſſeſſion of the city, it was partly rebuilt, and reduced to ſome order. In 1635, it was again blockaded by the troops of Brandenburg and Weimar, and, in 1636, beſieged by the Imperialiſts and Saxons, and taken by capitulation, on which the Swediſh garriſon withdrew: 52 miles ESE. MAGELLAN (Straits of), a paſſage between the Atlantic and Pacific Ocean, at the ſouthern extremity of the continent of America, upwards of 300 miles in length, from Cape Virgin, in the Atlantic, to Cape Deſire, in the Pacific Ocean; in ſome places ſeveral leagues over, and in others not half a league. Theſe ſtraits were diſcovered, and paſſed through, in the year 1520, by Ferdinando Magellan, a Portugueſe, in the ſervice of the crown of Spain, while in queſt of a weſtern paſſage to the Eaſt Indies; which he accordingly performed, but was unfortunately killed in the Molucca Iſlands. His ſhip, however, returned by the Cape of Good Hope, and was the firſt veſſel ever known to have ſurrounded the globe. It is ſaid to have many ſafe harbours in it, with narrow entrances, and vaſt large bays, encompaſſed with high mountains, ſheltering them ſo cloſe on all ſides, that ſhips may ſafely ride in them with the leaſt anchor. Admiral Drake alſo paſſed theſe ſtraits, in his voyage round the world. Long. 52. 30. to 59. W. Ferro. Lat. 52. 30. to 54. S.

MAIDENHEAD, a town of England, in the county of Berks, ſituated on the ſide of the river Thames, anciently called South Ealington; but ſaid to have changed its name in honour of a Britiſh Virgin, maſſa red by Attila at Cologn. It is an ancient town, and owes its riſe to the bridge built over the Thames. It is governed by a mayor and aldermen, and has a weekly market on Wedneſday: 13 miles E. Reading, and 26 W. London.

MAIDSTONE, a town of England, in the county of Kent, ſituated on the ſide of a hill, near the Medway, over which is a bridge of ſeven arches. It conſiſts of four principal ſtreets, which interſect each other at the market croſs, and extends about a mile from north to ſouth, and three quarters of a mile from eaſt to weſt, and contains above 6000 inhabitants. It is a very ancient corporation, and at firſt governed by a portreeve, but in the reign of Edward VI. a new charter was granted, by which that chief magiſtrate was honoured with the title of mayor. In the firſt year of queen Mary, however, the town, taking part in the rebellion of Sir Thomas Wyatt, was disfranchiſed. Queen Elizabeth granted a new charter, but the preſent charter of the town is a grant of George II. in the year 1748: which extends the juriſdiction of the magiſtrates over ſeveral neighbouring villages. Maidſtone is the county town. The aſſizes are held here; and here is one of the county gaols. A manufacture of linen thread was introduced by the Flemings, when they fled from the perſecution of the duke of Alva, and is ſtill continued. The ſoil, adjoining the town and in the neighbourhood, is remarkable for the culture of hops, of which there are many plantations. The navigation of the Medway is of eſſential ſervice to the town, and ſeveral hoys of fifty tons burthen are continually employed in conveying meal and flour to the dock and navy at Chatham, the town of Chatham, Rocheſter, and thence to London. Vaſt quantities of timber are brought here to be ſo conveyed, beſides hops, apples, cherries, nuts, and other articles. Here was formerly a palace of the archbiſhop of Canterbury, who is the incumbent, but it is now alienated. In the year 1648, this town held out for ſome time in behalf of Charles I. againſt general Fairfax, but was at length taken by ſtorm. Maidſtone ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament, and has a weekly market on Thurſday: 9 miles S. Rocheſter, and 35 SE. London.

Mailly le Châteaux, a town of France, in the department of the Yonne, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Auxerre: 4 leagues S. Auxerre, and 4 NW. Avalon.

MAIN, a town of Perſia, in the province of Farſiſtan: 14 leagues N. Shiras.

MAIN, or Maine, a diſtrict or province of United America, belonging to the ſtate of Maſſachuſetts, bounded on the north by Canada, on the eaſt by New Brunſwick, on the ſouth-eaſt by the Atlantic, and on the weſt by New Hampſhire; about 180 miles in length, and 110 in breadth. This country, as to climate, ſoil, and productions, is ſimilar to New Hampſhire: it is well watered by a number of rivers, which run into the ſea, and form convenient bays and harbours on the coaſt. The firſt attempt to ſettle this country was made in 1607, but this was of no continuance, nor was there any thing of conſequence, till in the year 1635, Ferdinando Gorges obtained a grant of the country, and is ſuppoſed to have been inſtituted governor. In the year 1652, the inhabitants ſubmitted to Maſſachuſetts, which ſtate afterwards purchaſed the patent granted to Gorges, for 120l. in the year 1677. The Maſſachuſetts now ſuppoſed they had both the juriſdiction and the ſoil, and accordingly governed in the manner the charter of Main had directed, until 1684, when the Maſſachuſett's charter was vacated. In 1691, by charter from William and Mary, the province of Main, and the large territory eaſtward, extending to Nova Scotia, was incorporated with the Maſſachuſett's Bay; ſince which it has been governed, and courts held, as in other parts of the Maſſachuſetts. This country, from its firſt ſettlement, has been greatly haraſſed by the Indians. In 1675, all the ſettlements were in a manner broken up and deſtroyed. From about 1692, until 1702, was one continual ſcene of killing, burning, and deſtroying. The inhabitants ſuffered much for ſeveral years preceding and following the year 1724. And ſo late as 1744 and 1748, perſons were killed and captivated by the Indians in many of the towns next the ſea. Since this period, the inhabitants have lived in peace, and have increaſed upwards of 50,000 ſouls. This number is daily and rapidly increaſing. To facilitate intercourſe between the inhabitants, the legiſlature have lately adopted meaſures for opening roads in different parts of the country. The whole province of Main, and the territory to the eaſt of it, as far as the weſtern boundary of Nova Scotia, were formerly in one county, by the name of Yorkſhire. In 1761, this extenſive country was divided into three counties. The eaſtermoſt called Lincoln. Next to Lincoln is Cumberland County, of which Portland is the county town, and capital of the whole territory. The reſt of the province of Main is included in York County. Theſe three counties are ſubdivided into ninety-four townſhips, of which Lincoln contains fifty-three, Cumberland twenty, and York twenty-one. Theſe counties, in 1778, had ſix regiments of militia. The preſent number of inhabitants in this diſtrict is about 100,000. There are no particular features in the character of the people of this diſtrict, to diſtinguiſh them from their neighbours in New Hampſhire and Vermont. Placed as they are in like circumſtances, they are, like them, a brave, hardy, enterpriſing, induſtrious, hoſpitable people. Epiſcopacy was eſtabliſhed by their firſt charter, but now the prevailing religious denominations are Congregationaliſts and Baptiſts, who are candid, tolerant, and catholic towards thoſe of other perſuaſions; there are a few Epiſcopalians and Roman Catholics. The ſeparation of this diſtrict, and its erection into an independent ſtate is probably not far diſtant.

MAINA, a town of European Turkey, near the weſt coaſt of the Morea: 30 miles S. Miſitra.

MAINBURG, a town of Germany, in the circle of Bavaria, on the Ambs: 18 miles ESE. Ingolſtadt, and 32 NNE. Munich.

MAJO BAMBA, a town of Peru, in the juriſdiction of Chacapoyas.

MAJOR, or Maggiora (Lake), a large lake of Italy, bounded on the north by the Swiſs bailiwicks, and on the ſouth by the Milaneſe; near fifty miles in length, and four in breadth; in many places eighty feet deep: the bottom is ſtony, the water clear and greeniſh: on all ſides it is ſurrounded by hills, planted with vineyards, and plantations of cheſnuts, interſperſed with villas. There are ſeveral iſlands, two of which, Iſola Bella, and Iſola Madre, called Boromæun Iſlands, are laid out in gardens and pleaſure grounds, with palaces erected on them, adorned with paintings, ſculptures, &c. The lake abounds with fiſh, particularly trout and perch.

MAJORCA, an iſland in the Mediterranean, belonging to Spain; the largeſt of thoſe anciently called Baleares, about 50 miles long, and 35 broad: the four chief capes pointing to the four cardinal points. This iſland is divided into two parts; that towards the north and weſt is mountainous, but not barren. The other lying ſouth and eaſt is level; and laid out in corn land, paſtures, vineyards, and orchards. This iſland abounds in corn, wine, oil, honey, ſaffron, large and ſmall cattle, wool, cheeſe, fiſh, rabbits, partridges, deer, wild-fowl, and horſes, without any ravenous wild beaſts. The whole iſland is encompaſſed with ſtrong towers, from which an enemy may be deſcried at a diſtance. It has ſeveral good harbours and anchoring places. The air is temperate and wholeſome; but the exceſſive heat and drought here frequently occaſion a ſcarcity; though the iſland, in general, is well ſupplied with water. The inhabitants, in their manners and cuſtoms, reſemble the Spaniards; but particularly the Catalonians. Perſons of faſhion here ſpeak Spaniſh; but the language of the commonalty is a medley of Limoſin, Greek, Latin, Spaniſh, and Arabic. The iſland maintains twenty companies of foot, five troops of horſe, and two companies of matroſſes, for the defence of the capital; beſides four regiments cantoned in other parts of the iſland. Majorca is the capital.

MAJORCA, anciently called Palma, a ſea-port town, and capital of Majorca, ſituated in a bay on the ſouth-weſt coaſt of the iſland; the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Valencia. It is fortified in the modern taſte; is large and has broad ſtreets, ſpacious ſquares, ſtately ſtone houſes, and twenty-two churches, beſides chapels and oratories. The largeſt ſquare here is that of Born, which is environed with grand buildings on every ſide; from whence the principal inhabitants view the bull fights, and other ſhows. The cathedral too is large and magnificent. In the town are ſix hoſpitals, and three other foundations for women. It has an Audencia Real, in which the commandant general preſides; a court of inquiſition, and an univerſity. The inhabitants are computed at 10,000. Long. 19. 20. E. MALABAR, the name given to the weſtern coaſt of Hindooſtan, from Cape Comorin to about 100 miles ſouth of Goa.

MALACCA, a country of Aſia, forming a peninſula, at the ſouthern extremity of the kingdom of Siam, and, except towards the north, where it joins that country, ſurrounded by the ſea, about 500 miles in length from north to ſouth, and from 60 to 150 in breadth. Some travellers aſſure us, that it is divided into ſeven kingdoms, every one of which may be about 10 leagues in breadth, and 30 in length. It was diſcovered in 1509, by Seguera, and in 1511, by Alphonſo Albuquerque, who made himſelf maſter of the city of Malacca. The Dutch, ſupported by the forces of the king of Thor, in 1606, began to diſturb the Portugueſe in their poſſeſſion, and after thirty-five years of continual hoſtilities, took it from them in 1641. The inhabitants of Malacca, or the Malais, are, for the moſt part, ſavages. The heat of the climate, which is but a little to the north of the line, renders their colour extremely ſwarthy; and they are very fond of Europeans, on account of their whiteneſs. As ſoon as they arrive on their coaſts, they offer them their wives and daughters, that they may have children like them. Notwithſtanding the barbarity of their manners, their language is reckoned the fineſt in all the Indies, where it is at leaſt as common as the French in Europe. It is very eaſily acquired, becauſe it has no inflections, either in nouns or verbs. The country is rich only on account of its commerce with the Chineſe: it muſt then have been through ignorance or miſtake, that the ancients gave it the name of the Golden Cherſoneſus.—In the month of November, 1795, this ſettlement was taken by the Britiſh troops.

MALACCA, a ſea-port town of Aſia, on the weſt coaſt of the country, and in the ſtraits of the ſame name: when the Portugueſe firſt became acquainted with the country, this city was in the poſſeſſion of the king of Johore, from whom it was taken by them, and in a ſhort time became famous all over India and Europe, lying almoſt in the centre of trade, brought thither by ſhipping from the rich kingdoms of Japan, China, Formoſa, Luçon, Tonquin, Cochin-china, Cambodia, and Siam; beſides what Johore produced, and Sumatra, Java, Borneo, Macaſſar, Banda, Amboyna, and Ternate, iſlands that abound in the moſt valuable commodities. After Goa and Ormuz, this was by far the richeſt city in the Indies, and a great market for all the different commodities theſe countries produced. It was the ſee of a biſhop, and the cathedral church, dedicated to St. Paul, was extremely elegant. They had, beſides, five other pariſh churches, and a noble college for the Jeſuits, together with a ſeminary, in which all new converts to the faith were inſtructed. The whole was encompaſſed with a ſtrong ſtone wall, regularly fortified with baſtions, the place extremely well peopled, and the garriſon numerous and well ſupplied, becauſe the Portugueſe conſidered it as the eaſtern frontier of their dominions, which therefore could not be kept too ſecure. In 1605, the Dutch attacked and deſtroyed a fleet of Portugueſe here, conſiſting of 54 ſail, on board of which were 3000 men; but notwithſtanding this victory, they were not able to take the place. Next year, the king of Johore inveſted it, with an army of 60,000 men, in revenge of what the Portugueſe had done againſt him three years before, when they took and deſtroyed his capital. However, he was alſo obliged to raiſe the ſiege with great loſs. But the Dutch, well knowing the importance of the place, and the vaſt advantages accruing to the Portugueſe from its ſituation and commerce, the former affording them an opportunity of levying 10 per cent. upon all veſſels paſſing through the Straits of Malacca, and the latter annually producing a large revenue, they attacked it, in the year 1640, ſo vigorouſly, that they became maſters of it, after a ſiege of ſix months. The walls and fortifications they preſerved, as alſo the church of St. Paul; but moſt of the other churches they deſtroyed, and the great hoſpital they turned into a warehouſe. Long. 119. E. Ferro. Lat. 2. 12. N.

MALACCA, (Straits of), the narrow ſea between the iſland of Sumatra, and the country of Malacca, extending from the equinoctial line to Lat. 5. N.

MALADUGNO, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Otranto: 9½ miles NW. Otranto.

MALAGA, a ſea-port town of Spain, in the province of Grenada. This is a ſmall but a very ancient city. The Phœnicians built it ſeveral centuries before Chriſt, and called it Malacha, on account of the great quantities of ſalt-fiſh ſold there. Strabo ſpeaks of it as a Carthaginian colony, very commercial, and famous for its ſalted proviſions. It is at preſent a handſome city, at the foot of a high mountain: the port is ſafe, and the mole ſtately, ſupported by a magnificent quay. The commerce of Malaga is at preſent confined to the wines made in the country, and known and eſteemed throughout Europe, the fruits of the ſoil, and brandies. It is the ſeat of a very ancient biſhopric, ſuffragan to Grenada. The firſt biſhop known of it was Patricius, who in the year 300 aſſiſted at the council of Iliberis; he had ſucceſſors, until the Moors conquered Malaga. They kept poſſeſſion of the city until the year 1487, when it was taken from them by Ferdinand V. who reduced it by famine. The cathedral is ſpacious, well built and elegant. Malaga has a very conſiderable commerce, the advantage of which is entirely in favour of Spain, but almoſt without any to its navigation: of 842 veſſels which arrived at this port in 1782, from almoſt every commercial nation, ſcarcely a hundred were Spaniſh, even reckoning the ſhips of war which anchored there. The Engliſh, who are in poſſeſſion of the greateſt part of the trade, carry thither woollens, and great quantities of ſmall ware; the Dutch carry ſpice, cutlery ware, laces, ribbons, thread, &c. Theſe nations, thoſe of the north, and Italy, export to the amount of two millions and a half of Piaſtres in wines, fruits, ſumach, pickled anchovies, oil, &c. and all they carry thither amounts only to about a million and a half. The balance would be ſtill more advantageous for Malaga, if the ſilk and wool of the kingdom of Grenada were exported from this port; but theſe are employed in the country where they are produced: 80 miles ESE. Seville, and 51 SE. Grenada. Long. 12. 14. E. Peak of Teneriffe. Lat. 36. 44. N.

MALDEGHEM, a town of Flanders: 10 miles E. Bruges.

MALDEN, a town of the county of Zutphen: 7 miles E. Borckeloe.

MALDEN, a town of England, in the county of Eſſex, ſituated on the river Blackwater, called alſo Malden Water, ſuppoſed to have been the reſidence of Cunobeline or Cymbeline, a Britiſh king. It had anciently the name of Camelodunum, and was the firſt Roman colony in Britain: the town being taken by Claudius, in the year 43, this colony was deſtroyed by Boadicea, and the town burned; but rebuilt by the Romans. Edward the Elder is ſaid to have built a caſtle here, as a defence againſt the Danes. Malden is a populous borough town, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. It has a weekly market on Saturday, principally for corn. Here is a convenient haven for ſhips. The channel, at ſpring tides, will bring up veſſels that draw eight feet of water, but the colliers lie in deep water below the town, and the coals are fetched up in lighters. The corn veſſels bring from the chalk-wharfs, in Kent, great quantities of chalk-rubbiſh for manuring land, as alſo chalk to make lime with for building and manure. The rivers Chelmer and Blackwater empty themſelves into this channel. The town conſiſts of one ſtreet near a mile long; and another pretty long ſtreet, beſides back lanes. The principal part of it is ſituated on an eminence, which commands many agreeable proſpects, the hill being very ſteep from the channel to the top of the town. The cuſtom of Borough Engliſh is kept up here, by which the youngeſt ſon, by reaſon of his tender age, and not the eldeſt, ſucceeds to the burgage-tenement, on the death of his father: 16 miles SSW. Colcheſter, and 37 ENE. London.

MALDIVE ISLANDS, a cluſter of iſlands, in the Indian Sea, ſituated about ninety leagues to the ſouth-weſt of Cape Comorin, the number is ſaid to amount to a thouſand or more, but they are for the moſt part ſmall and uninhabited. The inhabitants appear to be a mixture of Arabs and Indians of Malabar. They ſupply veſſels with ſails and cordage, cocoa-nuts, oil, and honey, dry fiſh, tortoiſe-ſhell, and eſpecially cowries: they lie in Long. 72. 30. to 73. 45.; and Lat. 5. 30. to 7. 5. N.

ALILLA, a town of Sweden, in the province of Smaland: 45 miles NNW. Calmar.

MALINES, or Mechlin, a city of Brabant, and capital of a province of the Netherlands, of the ſame name, which includes a ſmall territory, and about nine towns and villages. It is the ſee of an archbiſhop, and contains ſix pariſh churches. The magiſtracy is compoſed of an eſcout, two burgomaſters, twelve echevins, two governors of the police, two treaſurers, two penſioners, two ſecretaries, and two greffiers; it has ſeventeen companies of trades, the chiefs of which have a ſeat and a voice in the large council. The inhabitants carry on conſiderable manufactures in bed-quilts, thread, and particularly in lace, which is celebrated all over Europe. In the arſenal is a foundery for cannon, and other inſtruments of war. On the 7th of Auguſt, 1546, a terrible accident happened at Malines; the lightning ſet fire to the magazine, containing 2000 quintals of gunpowder, which blew up and deſtroyed 300 houſes, killed 200 perſons, and maimed 600 others. The report was ſo great, that it was diſtinctly heard at Bruſſels and Antwerp, the inhabitants of which cities conſidered it as an earthquake. In the year 1580, a party of Engliſh and Flemings, under the conduct of ſir John Norris, after having burned the fauxbourgs, entered into the city, pillaged and ſet fire to it in many places. In the year 1792, Malines admitted the French general Labourdonnaye, without a conteſt: 12 miles N. Bruſſels, and 12 S. Antwerp. Long. 22. 3. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. N.

MALLEVILLE, a town of France, in the department of the Lower Loire, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Savenay. 1 league E. Savenay, and 5 NW. Nantes.

MALLICOLLO, one of the largeſt of thoſe iſlands called New Hebrides, in the South Pacific Ocean, about 18 leagues long, and from 5 to 7 wide. The land moderately elevated, and containing ſome foreſts, with large trees; the ſoil rich and fertile; vegetable productions abundant and various. The inhabitants are repreſented by captain Cook, who viſited the iſland in 1774, as the moſt ugly, ill proportioned people he ever ſaw. They are a very dark coloured, and rather diminutive race; with long heads, flat faces, and monkey countenances. Their hair, moſtly black or brown, is ſhort and curly; but not quite ſo ſoft and woolly as that of a negroe. Their beards are very ſtrong, criſp, and buſhy, and generally black and ſhort. But what moſt adds to their deformity, is a belt, or cord, which they wear round the waiſt, and tie ſo tight over the belly, that the ſhape of their bodies is not unlike that of an overgrown piſmire. The men go quite naked, except a piece of cloth or leaf uſed as a wrapper. They ſaw but few women, and they were not leſs ugly than the men; their heads, faces, and ſhoulders, are painted red. Their weapons are clubs, ſpears, bows and arrows. The two former were made of hard or iron wood. The country is ſuppoſed to be fertile, but their fruits, in general, inferior to thoſe of the Friendly Iſlands, except their yams, which were very good. They had no dogs; for which reaſon, captain Cook left them a dog and a bitch. The harbour, which captain Cook called Port Sandwich, is ſituated on the north-eaſt ſide of Mallicolla, not far from the ſouth-eaſt end, in Long. 167. 57. 23. E. Greenwich; Lat. 16. 25. 20. S.

MALLING, or Weſt Malling, or Town Malling, a town of England, in the county of Kent, ſituated on a brook which runs into the Medway, with a weekly market on Saturday. Here was once an abby, founded by Gundulph, biſhop of Rocheſter, in the reign of William II: 6 miles W. Maidſtone, and 29 SE. London.

MALLOT, a town of France, in the department of the Calvados, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Caen: 1 league SSW. Caen.

MALLOW, a town of Ireland, in the county of Cork, ſituated on the river Blackwater, one of the moſt conſiderable inland towns of the county, and much frequented on account of a ſpring, whoſe waters are ſaid to reſemble thoſe of Briſtol, both in taſte and virtue. Here were formerly two caſtles, ruined in the laſt century: 32 miles S. Limerick, and 14 N. Cork. Long. 8. 39. W. Greenwich. Lat. 52. 8. N.

MALMEDY, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, which, though ſituated in the biſhopric of Liege, is yet under the juriſdiction of the archbiſhop of Cologn in ſpiritualities. It has ſome mineral ſprings, which, in the opinion of ſome phyſicians, are equal, or rather ſuperior to thoſe of Spa. The town contains about 400 houſes. The principal trade carried on, is, making of cloth, and dreſſing leather. It has a celebrated abby of Benedictines, founded by St. Remacle, united under the ſame abbot with Stablo, in the year 1071: 23 miles ESE. Liege. Long. 23. 33. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 28. N.—This town was taken by the French, on the 19th October, 1794.

MALMESBURY, a town of England, in the county of Wilts, ſaid to have been built by Dunwallo Molmutius, a Britiſh king, and called Caer-Bladon; being deſtroyed by war, a caſtle is ſaid to have riſen out of its ruins, which was called Ingelborne, for a long time, till Maidulphus, founding a religious houſe here, it was called Maidulphſburg, and by corruption, Malmeſbury. Among the diſciples of Maidulphus, the moſt eminent was Aldelm, who was appointed to ſucceed him, and by the help of Eleutherius, biſhop of the Weſt Saxons, and owner of the place, built here a fair abby, over which he firſt preſided; and from him this town is called, in an ancient MS. Aldelmeſbirig. But this name was ſoon loſt, though the memory of the man, who was canonized, remains. The great Athelſtan, choſe this Aldelm, after his death, for patron ſaint; and, on this account, he granted conſiderable privileges to the town, endowed the abby in an ample manner, and choſe it for his burying-place. From his reign, the abby continued to flouriſh in great wealth, and, among other very learned men, produced William, hence called of Malmeſbury, to whoſe learned diligence the eccleſiaſtical and civil hiſtory of England has great obligation. The town depended, in a manner, on the abby, and was fortified by Roger, biſhop of Saliſbury, who, in the war between Henry of Anjou and king Stephen, built here walls and a caſtle, which once held out againſt Henry II. That magnificent prelate raiſed here, and at Saliſbury, at a great expence, very extenſive and beautiful buildings, the ſtones of which were ſo laid, that the joints could ſcarcely be ſeen, and the whole wall looked like one ſtone. The caſtle was, not long after, demoliſhed, for the convenience of the monks, by licence from king John, in order to enlarge the abby, which received continual acceſſion of wealth and buildings, till the fatal ſtorm which deſtroyed the religious houſes of England. The abbot was mitred, and had a ſeat in parliament. At the diſſolution, this abby, which exceeded all in the county in revenues and honour, and was valued at 803l. 17s. was purchaſed of the king by Stumpe, an exceeding rich clothier, who filled with looms every corner of the vaſt offices belonging to it, and intended, in Leland's time, to make a ſtreet for clothiers in the back vacant ground with within the town walls. It is a borough town, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament: 56 miles NE. Briſtol, and 95 W. London.

MALMISCH, a town of Ruſſia, in the government of Viatka, on the Viatka: 100 miles S. Viatka. Long. 68. E. Ferro. Lat. 56. 44. N.

MALMO, a ſea-port town of Sweden, in the province of Schonen, ſituated in the Sound. In the year 1319, the inhabitants were removed, from a former ſituation, higher up the country, to the place where the town now ſtands. It is ſurrounded with walls, moats, and baſtions, towards the land, and is defended by ſeveral fortifications and a caſtle, towards the ſea. The caſtle was built in 1434, razed in 1534, and rebuilt in the year 1538. In this town are two burgo-maſters, a good ſchool, one Swediſh and one German church, an orphan houſe, a large market-place, fine ſtreets, and ſeveral woollen manufactures: 9 miles SW. Lund, and 16 SE. Copenhagen. Long. 12. 56. E. Greenwich. Lat. 55. 34. N.

MALPIEV, a town of Spain, in New Caſtile: 25 miles W. Toledo.

MALPLAQUET, a village of Hainaut, famous for a battle fought there, on the 11th of September, 1709, between the allies, commanded by the duke of Marlborough and prince Eugene, and the French, under marechal Villars and Boufflers. Voltaire affirms, that the French army did not exceed 80,000; Engliſh writers augment the number to 120,000; and, perhaps, they were nearer the truth. The French fought with an obſtinacy of courage that bordered on deſpair, till ſeeing their lines forced, their left wing and centre giving way, and their general, Viliars, dangerouſly wounded, they made an excellent retreat towards Bavay, under the conduct of Boufflers, and took poſt between Queſnoy and Valenciennes. The field of battle they abandoned to the confederates, with about forty colours and ſtandards, ſixteen pieces of artillery, and a good number of priſoners: but this was the deareſt victory the allies had ever purchaſed. Above twenty thouſand of their beſt troops were killed in the engagement; whereas the enemy did not loſe half the number: 8 miles SE. Mons.

MALS, a town of the Griſons, in Lower Engadine: 1½ mile W. Glurentz.

MALSCH, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, and biſhopric of Spire: 10 miles E. Spire.

MALSESENA, a town of Italy, in the Veroneſe, belonging to the ſtate of Venice: 18 miles NNW. Verona.

MALTA, an iſland in the Mediterranean, ſituated about fifty miles from the coaſt of Sicily. Anciently, it was called Iberia, afterwards Ogygia, and by the Greeks Melite, from which, at laſt, the Saracens formed the appellation of Malta. Its length is computed to be twenty miles, its greateſt breadth twelve, and its circumference ſixty miles. It is entirely rocky, and produces no more corn than barely ſuffices to maintain the inhabitants for ſix months. Many ſhip loads of earth have, indeed, been brought here from Sicily, and the rocky bottom covered therewith, in order to render it in ſome places more fruitful, but the ſoil has in a ſhort time crumbled into duſt, there being but little rain to preſerve it in a proper adheſion. The wine produced in this iſland, is not ſufficient for its conſumption, and it, alſo, is deficient in wood. On the other hand, it has fruits and cotton, a plenty of honey, good paſture, conſiderable fiſheries, ſea-ſalt, and a profitable coral fiſhery. Its annual revenues are computed at 76,000 ſcudi. The number of its inhabitants amounts in all to about 60,000. The common language of the country is a corrupt Arabic, but in towns Italian is ſpoken. The moſt ancient inhabitants of this iſland, of whom we have any account, were the Phœacians, who were driven out by the Phœnicians, and they in their turn by the Greeks. Afterwards it ſeems to have been under the dominion of the Carthaginians, from whom the Romans took it. Upon the decenſion of the Roman empire, it was firſt ſubdued by the Goths, then by the Saracens, but wreſted from them by the Normans, in the year 1090, after which time it had the ſame maſters as Sicily, till Charles V. gave it to the knights of St. John of Jeruſalem, who had been ſucceſſively driven from Paleſtine and Rhodes: in conſequence of which they have been called the knights of Malta. Valetta is the capital. Long. 32. E. Ferro. Lat. 35. 52. N. On the 1ſt of June, 1798, this iſland ſurrendered to the troops of the French republic, under the command of general Buonaparte.

MALTA, or Medina, ſee Civita Vecchia.

MALTON, or New Malton, a town of England, in the north riding of the county of York, ſituated on the weſt ſide of the river Derwent, with a weekly market on Saturday. It is a borough town, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament: the river Derwent is navigable to the Ouſe: 18 miles NE. York, and 215 N. London.

MAMTRASNA, mountains of Ireland, in the county of Galway: 15 miles S. Caſtlebar.

MAMUM, a town of Africa, in the country of Segilmeſſa.

MAN (Iſland of), an iſland ſituated in the Iriſh Sea, at an almoſt equal diſtance between the kingdoms of England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales. The extent from north to ſouth rather more than 30 miles in length, not above 15 broad in the wideſt, nor above 8 in the narroweſt part. The ſoil is very different; towards the ſouth it is as good as can be deſired. The mountains are cold, and conſequently leſs fruitful. The vallies between them afford as good paſture, hay, and corn, as in moſt other places. Towards the north, indeed, there is a dry, barren, ſandy earth, but capable of improvement. A large tract of land, called the Curragh, was formerly a bog, but ſince it has been drained, it is one of the richeſt parts of the iſland; and though the peat is ſix, eight, or ten feet deep, yet by good huſbandry they have got a ſurface which will bear the plough. And the ſame place ſupplies the neighbourhood both with bread and fuel. In this place have been found very large trees of oak and fir, ſome two feet and a half in diameter, and forty feet long, ſuppoſed by the inhabitants to have lain here ever ſince the deluge. The oaks and fir do not lie promiſcuouſly; but where is plenty of one ſort, there are generally few or none of the other. A high ridge of mountains runs almoſt the length of the iſland, which ſupplies the inhabitants quite round with water and fire. Abundance of little rivulets and ſprings of excellent water (by the ſides of which the inhabitants have for the moſt part built their houſes) run hence to the ſea, and the ſides of the mountains are ſtored with heath, and an excellent peat for fuel. The higheſt of theſe mountains is called Snafield; its height, as taken by an exact barometer, being about 580 yards; the mercury ſubſiding two inches and one-tenth. From the top of this mountain they have a fair proſpect of England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales. The air is ſharp and cold in winter; but in all ſuch places as have a natural ſhelter, or an artificial one from trees, the air is as mild as in Lancaſhire; the froſts being ſhort, and the ſnow not lying long on the ground, eſpecially near the ſea. The black cattle and horſes are generally leſs than thoſe of England; but as the land improves, ſo do theſe, and of late there have been ſome bred here as large as in other places. Of ſeveral noxious animals, ſuch as badgers, foxes, otters, filmerts, moles, hedge-hogs, ſnakes, toads, &c. the inhabitants, in the time of biſhop Wilſon, from whom this account is taken, knew no more than their names; as alſo ſeveral birds, ſuch as the woodpecker, the jay, the maup, &c. And it is not long ſince a perſon, more fanciful than prudent or kind to his country, brought in a breed of magpies, which have increaſed incredibly, ſo as to become a nuiſance; and only a few years ſince ſomebody brought in frogs, which they ſay increaſe very faſt. There are not many quarries of good ſtone: but one there is near Caſtle Town, which yields a tolerably good marble, fit for tombſtones, &c. There are alſo a good many quarries of a blue, thin, light ſlate, one of the beſt coverings for houſes; of which great quantities are exported. Mines of coal there are none, though ſeveral attempts have been made to find them. But of lead, copper, and iron, there are ſeveral, and ſome of them have been wrought to good advantage, particularly the lead, of which ore many hundred tons have lately been ſmelted, and exported. This iſland has had many maſters. The Norwegians conquered this when they made themſelves maſters of the Weſtern Iſles, which they ſent kings to govern, who generally choſe the Iſle of Man for their reſidence. This continued until 1266, when there was a very ſolemn agreement made between Magnus IV. of Norway, and Alexander III. of Scotland, by which this iſle, among the reſt, was ſurrendered to the Scots for 4000 marks, to be paid in four years, and 100 marks yearly; and, purſuant to this, Alexander drove out the king of Man, in the year 1270, and united it to Scotland. In 1312, there was a ſecond agreement between Hacquin V. and Robert I. of Scotland; and in 1426, a third agreement, all of which are ſet down at large in Torfeus's Hiſtory of the Orcades. But before this laſt agreement, the iſland was in the poſſeſſion of John lord Stanley and of Man, who had it given him by Henry IV. in 1405. However, foraſmuch as by the laſt agreement between the kings of Norway and Scotland, the latter claimed a right to this iſland, the lords of Man were obliged to keep a conſtant ſtanding army and garriſons for the defence of it, till the reign of king James I. of England. And in this honourable houſe it continued to the year 1739, except for twelve years during the civil wars, when it was given by the parliament to the lord Fairfax; but it returned to its ancient lords at the Reſtoration. After which it came to the ducheſs of Athol, the daughter of the earl, as a barony in fee. The lord ſends a governor, lieutenant, or captain, who conſtantly reſides at Caſtletown, where he has a handſome houſe, ſalary, and other conveniences befitting his ſtation. He is to take care that all officers, civil and military, diſcharge their truſts and duty. He is chancellor, and to him there is an appeal in matters of right and wrong, and from him to the lord, and, finally (if occaſion be) to the king of England, in council. By act of parliament, 1765, the iſland and lordſhip of Man, and all the iſlands and lordſhips, royalties and regalities, and franchiſes, liberties, and ſeaports to the ſame belonging, and all other the hereditaments and premiſes granted by the ſeveral letters patent to the family of Derby, &c. ſhall be unalienably veſted in his majeſty and ſucceſſors, excepting and reſerving to the duke of Athol and his heirs, the patronage of the biſhopric of the Iſle of Man, or of the biſhoprics of Sodor and Man, the temporals of the ſame when vacant, and all other patronages and eccleſiaſtical benefices within the iſland; alſo reſerving the landed property, with all rights in or over the ſoil, as lords of the manor, with all courts baron, rents, ſervices, and other incidents to ſuch courts belonging, waſtes, commons, and other lands, inland water, fiſhings, mills, mines, and minerals; and alſo reſerving the honorary ſervice of rendering to his majeſty's heirs and ſucceſſors, kings and queens of England, two falcons, on the days of their reſpective coronations. By an abſtract of the clear revenue of Man, from 1754 to 1763, the medium was 7293l. 0s. 6d. per annum; of which the land revenue for the laſt year was 1409l. 17s. 6d.; and the income of the lands in the hands of the lord of the iſle 107l. The principal towns are Caſtle-Town, Peel, Douglas, and Ramſey. The commodities of this iſland are black cattle, and coarſe woollen cloth, hides, ſkins, honey, and tallow. The Iſle of Man was converted to the Chriſtian faith by St. Patrick, about the year 440, at which time the biſhopric of Man was erected. The biſhops are barons of the iſland, and have a ſeat, though not a voice, in the Engliſh houſe of peers.

MANCHA (La), a province of Spain, in New Caſtile, bounded on the north by the province of Toledo, on the eaſt by Murcia, on the ſouth by Murcia and Jaen, and on the weſt by Eſtremadura, almoſt every way ſurrounded by mountains. A late traveller ſays, "There is no labourer nor young female peaſant who is not well acquainted with Don Quixote and Sancho." This is the moſt cheerful country in Spain; the inhabitants are affable, and great lovers of muſic and dancing: the women are tall, well made, and have handſome features. A player upon the guittar, and a ſinger of ſeguidillas, are perſons in great requeſt in this part of the country. The girls, young men, and married women aſſemble at the firſt ſound of the inſtrument; the concourſe is generally at the Poſada, as the moſt convenient and extenſive place; the beſt voices ſing ſeguidillas, and the blind accompany them upon their inſtruments. The ſtranger is aſtoniſhed at ſeeing a labourer, in the dreſs of Sancho, wearing a broad leathern girdle, become an agreeable dancer, and perform all his ſteps with grace, preciſion, and meaſure. The women, beſides, have a Meneo, as it is called, or a certain rapid movement, a flexibility or yielding attitude, ſuch voluptuous poſtures, and ſteps ſo languiſhing, graceful, varied, and juſt, that while ſeeing a pretty woman dance, a philoſopher would find his wiſdom troubleſome. La Mancha is the province of Spain in which the inhabitants ſing and dance the moſt: their ſongs and their ſeguidillas are peculiar to that part of the kingdom; and it is to be remarked, that to ſinging and dancing the Manchegas add the merit poetry. The ſeguidillas compoſed in French, are in much eſteem throughout all Spain. Moſt of them are voluptuous, and turn on the ſubject of love or abſence: ſome are ſatirical.

MANCHE (La), i. e. The Channel, a department of France, bounded on the north and weſt by the Engliſh Channel, on the eaſt by the Channel and the departments of the Calvados and the Orne, and on the ſouth by the departments of the Ille and Vilaine, and the Mayenne; about 80 miles in length, from north to ſouth, and 25 from eaſt to weſt. This department is formed of the weſtern part of Normandy; Coutances is the capital.

MANCHESTER, a town of England in the county of Lancaſter, ſituated on a navigable canal, at the conflux of the Irk and the Irwell. This is a very ancient town, and was a Roman ſtation, called Mancupium, or Manucium. In Camden's time, it was famous for its population, market, and manufacture of ſtuffs. Though neither a corporation, being governed only by a conſtable, nor a borough, it has the greateſt trade of any inland town in theſe northern parts, and has had a very rapid increaſe in the laſt two centuries. The fuſtian, or cotton manufacture, has been much improved of late, by ſome inventions of dying and printing; and this, with the great variety of other manufactures, known by the name of Mancheſter wares, renders both the town and the neighbourhood for many miles round, rich, populous, and induſtrious. Eighty years ago, here were reckoned near 20,000 communicants in the town and pariſh, ſince which time the number of inhabitants has increaſed in proportion to the trade. The college was founded in 1421, by Thomas de la War, at firſt rector of the pariſh church, and brother to lord Delawar, for a maſter or warden, eight fellow chaplains, four clerks, and ſix choriſters, in honour of St. Mary, St. Denis, and St. George. Mancheſter contains about 600 ſtreets, and 14 churches, beſides other places of worſhip; the number of inhabitants is eſtimated at 70,000. In the year 1781, a Literary and Philoſophical Society was inſtituted here, by ſome men of conſiderable eminence in the republic of letters. Among the public buildings, beſides the college founded by Thomas de la War, are Cheetham's hoſpital, founded for the education and maintenance of forty poor boys, the infirmary, theatre, exchange, &c. There are two markets weekly, Tueſday and Saturday; the former is chiefly for the purpoſe of tranſacting buſineſs between the traders and manufacturers of the town and neighbourhood: 38 miles ENE. Cheſter, and 182 NW. London.

MANDEURE, a town of the principality of Montbeliard, anciently the capital of the Mandubij: 5 miles S. Montbeliard.

MANDINGO, a kingdom of Africa, ſituated about 200 miles from the Atlantic, near the river Gambia. The Mandingoes are in general a lively joyous people, who conſume half their time in dancing, muſic, mirth, and good-humoured gaiety; yet being much addicted to company, warm and impetuous in their diſpoſition, they fall into frequent quarrels, which commonly terminate in blood. Neceſſity and ſelf-preſervation oblige them to ſow and reap, but this labour does not laſt above two months in a year; the other months are ſpent in idleneſs and ſloth all the day, and at night in dancing under the ſhade. A few childiſh diverſions they have, which they perform with abundance of addreſs; but every thing manly is neglected: fiſhing and hunting are unknown, though no country affords better opportunities for both. Smoking tobacco is their whole pleaſure, which increaſes their natural ſloth, by deſtroying their appetite for food. It is of the growth of their country, and they ſmoke in wooden pipes, five or ſix feet in length, the bowl made of wood, hardened and dried in the fire, and finely poliſhed. Immediately after a child is born, he is bathed in cold water three or four times a day, and after being carefully dried, anointed with palm-oil along the ſpine, elbows, hams, and neck. They go naked to the age of eight or ten, and frequently paint their faces and neck for ornament. Every part of domeſtic economy is left to the care of the women, while the men cultivate the ſmall quantities of rice wanted for the family, and paſs away the reſt of their time in idleneſs. After laying up a quantity ſufficient for the conſumption of the family, the women have a right to diſpoſe of the reſt, but are accountable for the profits that ariſe to their huſbands. Many of the Mandingoes have a pride in keeping a crowd of ſlaves, whom they treat with ſuch gentle uſage, kindneſs, and humanity, that it is not eaſy to diſtinguiſh the maſter from the ſlave; eſpecially the women, whe wear necklaces, bracelets, and ear-rings, of amber, coral, and ſilver, as if the men had purchaſed them only to become their huſbands. Moſt of theſe ſlaves are born in their families, and naturalized to them as their own children. In moſt other parts of Africa, the maſter has a right to ſell all ſlaves born in the family; but in Mandingo this action is treated as a crime, inſomuch, that if any of them are diſpoſed of without their conſent, and againſt the will of their fellow-ſlaves, they all abandon their maſter, and ſeek a retreat in ſome other kingdom: for though in this caſe he has no power to puniſh them, yet they reckon it diſhonourable to enter into the ſervice of another maſter in the ſame kingdom.

MANHARTZBERG, a quarter or diviſion of the archduchy of Auſtria, ſituated between the Danube and Bohemia and Moravia.

MANHEIM, a city of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, and palatinate of the Rhine. This town is the reſidence of the Elector Palatine, and ſecond town of the electorate, being ſituated in a low plain, near the conflux of the Neckar and the Rhine. In the year 1606, the elector, Frederic IV. began to convert the old village and citadel of Manheim into a town, receiving into it ſome Netherlanders, who had quitted their country for the ſake of liberty of conſcience. And though this new town was miſerably laid waſte, in the year 1622, at which time it was beſieged and taken by the Bavarians, and in 1688, together with the fort of Frederickſburg, entirely demoliſhed by the French; yet the electors John William and Charles Philip, cauſed it to be rebuilt, and fortified in ſuch a manner, that it became one of the fineſt towns in Germany, and a place of great ſtrength; but for the defence of it are required full 10,000 men: the preſent works were formed upon the ſyſtem of Cohorn. The number of the inhabitants, excluſive of the garriſon, was, in 1784, 21,858. Some of the ſtreets are planted with rows of trees, and there are five or ſix open places, ſuitable for promenades, or markets. The cuſtom-houſe, which forms a ſide to one of theſe, is a noble ſtone building, rather appearing to be a palace than an office, except that under the colonnades, which ſurround it, are ſhops for jewellery, and other commodities. The electoral palace, which opens on one ſide to the city, and on the other to the ramparts, was built by the elector, Charles-Philippe, who, in the year 1721, removed his reſidence hither from Heidelberg, on account of ſome difference with the magiſtrates, or, as it is ſaid, of the prevalence of religious diſputes in that city. He began to erect it in 1720; but the edifice was not completed till the right wing was added by the preſent elector, not to be uſed as a reſidence, but to contain a gallery for paintings, cabinets of antiquities and natural hiſtory, a library, treaſury, and menage: 38 miles SSE. Mentz, and 92 ESE. Treves. Long. 25. 8. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 23. N.—On the 20th of October, 1795, this city was taken by the French.

MANILBA, a town of Spain, in the province of Grenada: 21 miles SW. Marbella.

MANILLA, a town of the iſland of Luçon, of which it is the capital, as well as of the Philippine Iſlands; ſituated on a bay on the ſouth-weſt coaſt. In compaſs it is two miles, in length two thirds of a mile; the ſhape irregular, being narrow at both ends, and wide in the middle, and well furniſhed with braſs guns, and good out-works. The palaces of Manilla, though all of timber above the firſt floor, yet are beautiful from their handſome galleries. The ſtreets are broad, but frequent earthquakes have ſpoiled their uniformity, by overthrowing houſes and palaces, which are not rebuilt. Manilla contains about 3000 ſouls, of various mixtures, qualities, and complexions, produced by the conjunction of Spaniards, Indians, Chineſe, Malabars, Blacks, and others inhabiting that city, and the adjacent iſlands. Though Manilla be ſo ſmall, if we look only on the circumference of its walls, and the number of inhabitants, yet it will appear large if we include its ſuburbs; for within a muſket ſhot of the gate of Parian, is the habitation of the Chineſe merchants, called Sangleys, who in ſeveral ſtreets have rich ſhops of ſilk, porcelain, and other commodities. Here are found ſuch as exerciſe all arts and trades; ſo that all the wealth of the citizens run through their hands, through the indolence of the Spaniards and Indians, who apply themſelves to nothing. There are about 3000 of them in this ſuburb, and as many more throughout the iſlands. There were formerly 40,000; but abundance of them were put to death in tumults they raiſed at ſeveral times, particularly that on St. Francis's eve, in 1603, after which they were prohibited ſtaying in the iſland by his Catholic majeſty. This order is very little obſerved, for there always remain behind many of thoſe that come every year, in forty or fifty chiampans, loaded with commodities; the profit being very great at Manilla, which they could not find in China, from the ſmall price manufactures bear. The merchants, or ſangleys, of Parian are governed by an alcaide, to whom they allow a good ſalary, as well as to the king's ſolicitor, their protector, to his ſteward and other officers, beſides all the duties and taxes to the king. They pay his majeſty 10,000 pieces of eight a year for the privilege of playing at metua at their new year, and yet this permiſſion is but for a few days, that they may not throw away other men's money. Metua is the game of even or odd, at which they play, laying down ſmall heaps of money, to be won or loſt by gueſſing right. They that uſe this ſport are ſo expert, that they know the number by viewing the dimenſions of the heap. The Spaniards keep the Chineſe very much under, not ſuffering them to be in Chriſtian houſes at night, and obliging them to be without light in their houſes and ſhops. Over the bridge adjoining to Parian are ſuburbs or hamlets, fifteen in all, inhabited by Japaneſe, Tagalis, and other nations, under the government of an alcaide. The houſes are generally of wood, near the river, and ſtanding on pillars, with ſteps going up to them. The roofs are covered with nipa, or palm-tree leaves, the ſides of cane, and they aſcend to them by ladders, becauſe the ground is moiſt, and ſometimes full of water. The caſtle or fort ſtands at the weſt end of the city, having the ſea on one ſide, and the river on the other: it is ſtyled the citadel of St. James, and was originally fortified in the ſhape of a triangle, having one baſtion towards the ſea, another towards the river, and a third at the weſt point, to cover the port, which is only fit for ſmall veſſels. In the year 1645, great part of this city, was deſtroyed by an earthquake, and 3000 people periſhed in the ruins. In the year 1762, Manilla was taken by the Engliſh, and to ſave it from deſtruction, it was agreed to pay a million ſterling for its ranſom. Long. 120. 54. E. Greenwich. Lat. 14. 36. N.

MANSFELD, (County of), a principality of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, which is bounded by the electorate of Saxony and Querfurt, the dioceſe of Merſeburg, and the duchy of Magdeburg, the principalities of Anhalt and Halberſtadt, and the county of Stolberg. Its greateſt length is twenty-eight, and its greateſt breadth ſixteen miles. It is in general mountainous, but affords good corn land and paſturage, together with large woods of great profit, vineyards, chaſes, and fiſheries, as alſo a ſalt work and mine, which is divided into three departments, and yields a ſlate, from which copper is extracted. A quintal of the beſt ſlate at moſt, and that too but very ſeldom, contains five pounds of fine eſſayed copper: a quintal of the worſt yields only two pounds, but both ſorts are mixed together in the proceſs of ſmelting. Formerly the copper extracted from the ſlate dug here amounted annually to 18,000 or 20,000 quintals, each of which yielded from ten to twelve ounces of ſilver. Of this ſilver, in the beginning of the 15th century, a great number of dollars were coined; but, at preſent, the total weight of the copper hardly amounts to 1500 quintals. This ſlate is remarkable for impreſſions of all kinds of animals, eſpecially of fiſhes. In this county, likewiſe, are two conſiderable lakes, ſtanding near each other, and even communicating, but of a very different nature. The water of one of them, and that the largeſt, being quite ſalt, while the water in the other is perfectly freſh and ſweet. They both abound in fiſh and creviſſes, inſomuch, that the villages along their banks ſubſiſt by fiſhing. They afford, alſo, an inexhauſtible number of wild ducks, geeſe, ſnipes, and other water-fowls, ſome of which are ſhot, and others taken by a net. The number of towns in the whole country amounts to ſeven. The prevailing religion here is Lutheraniſm, the introduction of which into this country was zealouſly promoted by Albert VII. count of Manſfeld. The counts of Manſfeld are deſcended from the lords of Querfurt. The ancient male line of Manſfeld began in count Hoier I. who in 1115, fell in the great battle fought near Welſeſholze, in this county, betwixt king Henry V. and the Saxons, to the diſadvantage of the former. Ulrich I. and Burkhard I. grandſons to his ſons, Hoier II. in 1220, divided the county betwixt them. The progeny of the former became extinct in the 14th century, and the latter left no ſons; but, in 1219, a little before his death, his ſecond daughter, Sophia, was married to Burkhard VI. lord of Querfurt, count of Manſfeld and Hardeck, and burggrave of Magdeburg, from whom deſcended the preſent lineage of the counts of Manſfeld, and who are the firſt branches of this new ſtem. The county of Manſfeld is partly a fief of Saxony and Magdeburg. In the matricula of the empire, the county of Manſfeld is aſſeſſed to a Roman month in ten horſemen and forty-five foot, or 300 florins, of which ſum the ſaid counts, now ſtyled princes, are to pay 120, Saxony 135, and Magdeburg 45. To the chamber at Wetzlar, the elector of Saxony is charged for Manſfeld at 125 rixdollars 48 kruitzers, and Magdeburg 83 rixdollars 62 kruitzers.

MANSFIELD, a town of England, in the county of Nottingham; anciently a royal demeſne, to which the kings of England uſed to retire for the ſake of hunting, in Sheerwood Foreſt; and a manor was held by Henry Fauconberg, for ſhoeing the king's horſe when he came to Manſfield. It has conſiderable trade in corn and malt, and a manufacture of ſtockings. In the year 1304, it was almoſt deſtroyed by fire. It has a weekly market on Thurſday: 14 miles N. Nottingham, and 138 NNW. London.

MANTUA, a duchy of Italy, bounded on the north by the Breſſan and Veroneſe, on the eaſt by the Ferrareſe, on the ſouth by the duchy of Modena, and on the weſt by the Cremoneſe. It is about fifty miles in length, and thirty-five in breadth. The Po runs through the midſt of it, and it is alſo watered by other rivers, as the Oglio, Mincio, Secchia, &c. all which empty themſelves into the Po. The land abounds in corn, fruits, and legumes, with ſome wine, great quantities of flax, and a number of good horſes. Its hiſtory may be briefly as follows:—In 1328, Louis of Gonzaga, having extirpated the Bonacolſi family, made himſelf maſter of Mantua in their room. He was of German deſcent; and, after that exploit, took upon him the title of Imperial Vicar of Mantua, for which he appears to have obtained permiſſion from the emperor, Louis of Bavaria, though the pope refuſed to acknowledge him as ſuch. His iſſue ſucceeded him in the government of Mantua, and the imperial vicarſhip. In 1432, John Francis obtained, from the emperor Sigiſmund, the title of marquis; and Frederick II. was created a duke by the emperor Charles V. and, by marriage, obtained Montferrat, which was afterwards raiſed to a dukedom. His brother, Louis, by marriage alſo, had the duchies of Nevers and Retel, in France; and one of his deſcendants, by name Charles, the chief ducal line failing, was, in 1627, made duke of Mantua and Montferrat, and the duke of Savoy at that time was put in poſſeſſion of 75 places in the duchy of Montferrat. On the acceſſion of Philip, duke of Anjou, to the crown of Spain, by the death of Charles II. the duke of Mantua, in conſideration of 60,000 piſtoles paid down in hand, and a monthly ſubſidy of 36,000 dollars for maintaining a French garriſon of 4000 men, admitted the French troops into his capital. France had alſo engaged to procure him the reſtitution of the poſſeſſions formerly belonging to the houſe of Gonzaga, in Italy; and to make good whatever damages he might ſuffer by the approaching war. But this league with France proved his ruin, being on that account put under the ban of the empire. In 1703, the emperor transferred to the duke of Savoy that part of the duchy of Montferrat, which hitherto the dukes of Mantua had poſſeſſed as a fief. In 1707, the Imperialiſts overran the whole duchy of Mantua, and duke Charles IV. died the year following, under the ban of the empire. Ever ſince, the houſe of Auſtria has continued in poſſeſſion of this duchy, which now is annexed to the government of the Milaneſe.

MANTUA, a city of Italy, and capital of a duchy of the ſame name. It is ſituated on a lake, formed by inundations of the Mincio, 20 miles in circumference, and 2 broad. The ſeveral parts of this lake have different names, as Lago di Mezo, Lago di Sotto, Lago di Paivolo, and Lago di Sopro. The two chief bridges leading to this city over the lake are Ponte di Molini, defended by two citadels; and Ponte di St. Giorgia, with fortifications at both ends. The city is divided by the water into two almoſt equal parts, which have a communication with each other over ſix bridges. In the heat of ſummer, when the lake is low, and ſtagnates, the air becomes ſo noxious, that the better ſort of the inhabitants leave the city for ſome time. The citadel, which is rather more ſecure by nature than by art, is partly free from this inconvenience. The greater part of the ſtreets are long, broad, and ſtraight, with handſome ſtone houſes, fine ſquares, and ſtately churches. On the other ſide of the lake are three ſuburbs, namely, to the north, Porto Fortezza, to the north-eaſt, Il borgo di St. Giorgio, and to the ſouth, Il Thé. Here are, in all, four collegiate churches, twenty-one parochial, fourteen other churches and alms-houſes, eleven oratories, forty convents; and without the city three pariſh churches, two other churches, and ſeven convents. The Jews, of whom there are about 4 or 5000, live in a diſtinct quarter. The number of the inhabitants, excluſive of the garriſon, was formerly computed at 50,000. But ſince no court has been kept, the number has ſo dwindled away, that now the inhabitants ſcarcely exceed 16,000. In the cathedral, which is a work of Julio Romano, are ſeen paintings of the moſt celebrated maſters. The church of St. Antony is more famous for relics than any in Mantua; a conſiderable portion, as is pretended, of the blood of Chriſt being kept in a ſubterraneous chapel, with ſixteen altars, and once every year ſhown to the people. The Franciſcan church has an elegant inſide, and ſuch as very few of this mendicant order can ſhow in Italy. It has, alſo, a good library. The building that was the ducal palace, is very large and roomy. The ducal gallery and muſæum, formerly ſo famous, was, in 1630, pillaged by the ſoldiers, when the Imperialiſts took it by ſtorm, and, like every other place, is now empty, and in ruins. However, a moſt valuable treaſure of relics, gold and ſilver crowns, ſtatues, and other altar furniture, ſtill remain in the palace church, where are alſo ſeen two capital pictures of ineſtimable value, one of the baptiſm of Conſtantine the Great; and the other of the martyrdom of St. Andrew. The univerſity was founded in 1625. The ſilk and other manufactures, and the general commerce of this city, formerly ſo flouriſhing, are now inconſiderable; 70 miles WSW. Venice, and 70 ESE. Milan. Long. 28. 23. E. Ferro. Lat. 45. 8. N.—This city, after a long ſiege, was taken by the troops of the French republic, on the 3d of February, 1797. Mantua was firſt inveſted on the 4th of June, 1796. In the month of Auguſt, the ſiege was raiſed for a ſmall ſpace of time. General Wurmſer, who had endeavoured to relieve it, was obliged to retire within the walls, where he, with the remains of his army, was taken. The garriſon ſurrendered priſoners of war. The military, and other ſtores, were great, but 5000 horſes had been killed for proviſions during the ſiege.

It is well built, and contains about 4000 inhabitants, of which 800 are able to bear arms. Here is a large parochial church, an hoſpital, and four convents. Veſſels from 25 to 30 tons are continually coming hither, with manufactures and merchandiſes from the places near the lake, which are afterwards put on board Spaniſh ſhips that come hither to buy them. Ships are built at Marcaybo, which trade all over America, and even into Spain, this place being very commodious for ſhip building. It lies 338 miles E. Hacha. Long. 59. 38. W. Ferro. Lat. 10. 51. N.

MARACAYBO, a lake or rather gulf of South America, about 200 miles long, and 50 broad, running from ſouth to north, and empties itſelf into the North Sea; the entrance of which is well defended by ſtrong forts, but ſir Henry Morgan paſſed by them, plundered ſeveral Spaniſh towns on the coaſt, and defeated a ſquadron which had been ſent to intercept him. As the tide flows into this lake, its water is ſomething brackiſh, notwithſtanding the many rivers it receives. It abounds with all ſorts of fiſh, ſome of which are very large. By the navigation of this lake, the inhabitants of Venezuela carry on a trade with thoſe of New Grenada. The lake becomes narrower towards the middle, where the town is erected.

MARANHAO, or Marannon, a juriſdiction of South America, in Brazil, belonging to the Portugueſe, who firſt ſettled there in the year 1599, upwards of ſixty years after the diſcovery: it takes its name from an iſland ſituated at the mouth of three rivers, about fourteen leagues in circumference, which is fertile and well inhabited. In the year 1612, the French ſeized on the iſland, and built a town, called St. Louis de Maragnan; but the Portugueſe recovered it out of their hands. It is now very ſtrong, and hath a ſtout caſtle, built on a rock, towards the ſea, which commands a very convenient harbour. It is the ſee of a biſhop, under the archbiſhopric of St. Salvador de la Baya. The iſland itſelf is very difficult of acceſs, by reaſon of the rapidity of the three rivers which form it: ſo that veſſels muſt wait for proper winds and ſeaſons to viſit it. Beſides the town aforeſaid, here are two others, but leſs conſiderable. The natives have about twenty-ſeven hamlets, called Oc, or Tave, each conſiſting only of four large huts, forming a ſquare in the middle; but from 300 to 500 paces in length, and about twenty-five or thirty feet in depth; all being built of large timber, and covered from top to bottom with leaves, ſo that each may contain 200 or 300 inhabitants. The air is ſerene, ſeldom incommoded with ſtorms, exceſſive drought, or moiſture, except in the time of the periodical rains, which laſt from February to June. The land is fertile and rich, producing every thing in perfection, without labour or manure. The inhabitants go naked, but paint their faces and bodies of various colours, adorning their heads and arms with a variety of feathers. The children are born white, but are anointed with oils, which gradually turn their ſkins brown, or of an olive hue. They are ſtrong and healthy, live to a great age, and are ſeldom afflicted with diſeaſes. Bows and arrows are their only weapons, with which they are very dexterous, but they are fierce and cruel, eſpecially to their priſoners. The capital, of the ſame name, St. Felipe, or St. Louis de Maranhao, is ſituated Long. 27. 50. E. Ferro. Lat. 2. 30. S.

MARCK, or Mark, (County of), a principality of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, bounded on the north by the county of Recklinghauſen, and biſhopric of Munſter, on the eaſt by the duchy of Weſtphalia, on the ſouth by the duchy of Berg, and on the weſt by the duchies of Berg and Cleves. This county enjoys a fertile ſoil, with good meadows and arable land, which produce wheat, rye, barley, oats, buck-wheat, peas, vetches, lentils, beans, rape, turnip ſeed, flax and hemp in ſuch plenty, that the neighbouring countries are likewiſe ſupplied therewith. It produces alſo fruits and legumes of all kinds. The mountains yield coal, iron, lead, copper, and ſilver ores, and good quarries of ſtone. It contains in it upwards of 20 towns, excluſive of one half of the town of Lippſtadt. The inhabitants of this country are partly Roman catholics, partly Proteſtants, and all the three churches enjoy the free and public exerciſe of their religion, and that too for the moſt part ſeparate, ſometimes in the ſame church. There are many manufactures here, the produce of which is not only uſed in the country, but alſo plentifully exported ; and in particular great quantities of iron and ſteel are worked here in a variety of ways. The ancient counts of the Mark, received their origin from the counts of Altena. Adolphus III. count of Altena, who died in the year 1249, firſt aſſumed the title and arms of Mark. Adolphus V. count of Mark, was likewiſe count of Cleve. It came with Cleve to the electoral houſe of Brandenburg : the aſſeſſment is made with Cleves. Hamme is the capital.

MARDICK, a ſmall town or village of France, in the department of the North, ſituated near the coaſt of the Engliſh Channel, at one time defended by Forts. Mardick is celebrated for the noble canal there, which after the peace of Utrecht, Louis XIV. cauſed it to be erected under the direction of Le Blanc, being the length of 3338 toiſes and two feet. This canal began at the canal of Bergues, near Dunkirk, extending itſelf with a breadth of between 25 and 30 toiſes, no leſs than 1500 from eaſt to weſt in length, at which place it winded from ſouth to north, and 300 toiſes farther had an incomparable ſluice with two baſons on it, one of which was 44 feet broad, being contrived for the reception of large veſſels, the other 26 feet in breadth, and intended for ſmall. After this it extended ſtill farther to the main Sea. England reſenting this new canal, inſiſted, at the treaty in the year 1717, that France ſhould engage to demoliſh the large paſſage of the new ſluice, the ſmall ſluice to be continued of the ſame depth, but with a reduction of its breadth to 16 feet ; and all the other works, together with the dams and ſluices of the new canal to be deſtroyed and levelled, and none erected any more on that coaſt, within two leagues of Dunkirk and Mardick : 1 league SW. MARGARITA, an iſland in the Caribbean Sea, near the coaſt of Terra Firma, diſcovered by Columbus, in the year 1498, about thirty leagues in circumference. When firſt diſcovered, Columbus found the inhabitants employed in fiſhing for pearl oyſters, but this trade is now no more. The greateſt inconveniency of this iſland is, the want of freſh water, which the inhabitants are obliged to bring from the main land ; and yet the iſland abounds with paſture and verdant groves, and is fertile in maize and fruits. In the year 1620, this iſland was invaded by the Dutch, who demoliſhed the caſtle ; ſince which time it has been in a manner abandoned by the Spaniards, and it is now principally inhabited by the natives ; who had ſome particular indulgences from the court of

Spa

Spain, for their ſubmiſſion to Columbus. Long. 63. 22. W. Greenwich. Lat. 11. 7. N.

MARGARITIM, a town of European Turkey, in the province of Epire: 34 miles W. Arta.

MARGATE, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Kent, ſituated on the north coaſt of the iſle of Thanet, within a ſmall bay, in the breach of the cliff, where is a gate to the ſea, whence its name. In all matters of civil juriſdiction, Margate is ſubject to the mayor of Dover, whoſe deputy reſides here, and of which town and port it is a member. The principal ſtreet is near a mile in length, and built on an eaſy aſcent, by which means the upper part is clean and dry, and the lower end much more ſo than formerly; a conſiderable ſum of money having been lately expended in drains for that purpoſe. The harbour is pleaſant, but not greatly frequented, for want of a ſufficient depth of water to keep veſſels of burden afloat; nevertheleſs great quantities of corn, and all kinds of grain, are ſhipped here for London. The pier of wood carried out to the eaſtward, in a circular form, for the ſecurity of ſhipping, is built where nature, by a cove in the cliff, ſeemed to direct, and is very ancient. Margate has great convenience for bathing; the ſhore being level and covered with fine ſand, is extremely well adapted for that purpoſe. On the wharf are ſeveral bathing rooms which are large and convenient. Hither the company reſort to drink the water, and from thence, in turns, they enter the machines, which are driven out into the ſea, often to the diſtance of two or three hundred yards, under the conduct of careful guides Since Margate has been ſo much frequented by perſons of conſequence, many conſiderable additions and improvements have been made to the town. A large ſquare has been lately erected, in which are ſome very handſome houſes, built by perſons of fortune for their own uſe, with ſeveral others intended for the reception of the company. Margate is now as well ſupplied with ſhops as moſt other public places, and there are many very reputable tradeſmen, in all branches of buſineſs. The various articles of trade are moſtly furniſhed by a ready and quick communication with London, by the hoys. They are ſloops of eighty or a hundred tons burden of which there are five, and ſail alternately. The paſſage is made in eight or ten hours, and at other times in two or three days, as the wind and tide happen to ſuit. The beſt wind down is WNW. and the beſt up ESE.: 25 miles N. Dover, and 72 E. London. Long. 1. 14. E. Greenwich. Lat. 51. 24. N.

MARIANA, Marianne Iſlands, or Ladrones, a cluſter of iſlands in the North Pacific Ocean, firſt diſcovered by Magellan, in the year 1521, by ſome ſaid to be 14, others 16, but probably the exact number is not known, and occupy a ſpace of 150 leagues in extent. Magellan is ſaid to have called them when firſt ſeen, Las Iſlas de las Velas, that is, The Iſlands of Sails; or De las Velas Latinas, that is, Of Triangular Sails, from their prows, in which the inhabitants ſtood out to ſea upon the approach of his ſhip; but afterwards Las Iſlas de las Ladrones, or The Iſland of Thieves; becauſe the Indians who came on board him, ſtole every thing that was made of iron within their reach. It was not till the latter end of the laſt century, that they obtained the name of the Marianne Iſlands, from the queen of Spain, Mary Ann of Auſtria, the mother of Charles II. at whoſe expence miſſionaries were ſent over thither to propagate the Chriſtian faith. We hardly ever find them called by the name firſt mentioned, except in the relations of Magellan's voyage. As to the ſecond, it became their common appellation; and in all the old books of hiſtory and voyages, as well as in maps, we find them ſtyled the Ladrones; notwithſtanding which, the laſt mentioned name has gradually gained ground, and prevails at preſent; ſo that they are now commonly ſtyled in moſt of the languages of Europe, the Marianne, or rather, though leſs correctly, Marian Iſlands. Theſe iſlands lie in the torrid zone, and yet ſo much is the heat of the ſun tempered by the humidity of the air, and by breezes of the ſea, that the climate is, generally ſpeaking, equally ſerene, ſalubrious, and pleaſant; only in ſome ſeaſons of the year they are liable to hurricanes, which though they do ſometimes a great deal of miſchief, yet clear and refreſh the air, in ſuch a manner, that before they were viſited by the Europeans, the people commonly lived to a great age. The moſt ancient Spaniſh writers ſpeak of theſe iſlands as mean, barren, contemptible places, becauſe, with the fineſt ſun and the moſt fertile ſoil, they afford not either precious ſtones or metals. However, this country produced fruits, ſallads, and a variety of wholeſome herbs, and in the greateſt plenty. Beaſts, they had none, and but one kind of birds, not unlike the turtle dove. There were indeed fiſh of many different kinds in their rivers, and upon their coaſts. The inhabitants are tall, robuſt, and very active; of a dark colour, yet not quite ſo dark as the inhabitants of the Philippines; coarſe features, and rather hard-favoured. The men went entirely naked, the women only concealing what natural modeſty teaches ſhould be concealed. They may be ſaid to have no religion; and yet they were over-run with ſuperſtition. They had ſcarce any notion of the Deity, but an idea of the devil. They believed the immortality of the ſoul; and they were perſuaded that there was a place of happineſs, and another of torment. It is a point not hitherto decided from whom theſe people are deſcended, or whence they came; ſome have thought it probable, that they were of the ſame ſtock with the Philippines; others, from their love of freedom, the haughtineſs of theie ſpirits, and their high notions of nobility, have inclined to think them a-kin to the Japaneſe. They were very dextrous in ſwimming and diving, to which they enured their children as ſoon as they were able to walk, and thereby rendered them not only hardy and robuſt, but ſo accuſtomed to, and fearleſs of the water, that they were in a manner inhabitants of that element. Their ingenuity and mechanic genius was moſt conſpicuous in the invention of that ſingular veſſel, called by our ſeamen the flying prow, which has been commended and admired by all, but chiefly by thoſe whoſe ſkill in naval architecture enabled them to judge of it beſt. In theſe veſſels, before they had any acquaintance with the Europeans, they made conſiderable voyages from one iſland to another; and when overſet, ſhowed great preſence of mind in turning them, refitting, and getting again on board; ſo that, taking all circumſtances together, they might be eſteemed as briſk and bold ſeamen as any in this part of the world. They are likewiſe ſaid to have planted and cultivated their ground; but in what manner, or with what kind of ſeeds, does not appear. That moſt extraordinary and uſeful plant the bread-fruit-tree, was firſt diſcovered here.

MARIE GALANTE, an iſland in the Weſt Indies, diſcovered by Chriſtopher Columbus, in the year 1493, of a circular form and fourteen leagues in circumference. It was firſt ſettled by the French in the year 1647, from whom it was twice taken by the Dutch. In the year 1691, it was taken by the Engliſh, and again in the year 1759, but reſtored to the French in the year 1763. This iſland abounds with tobacco, and contains a great many grottos, where large crabs are found, as alſo ſeveral rivers and ponds of freſh water. Along the eaſtern ſhore run high rocks, which afford ſhelter to vaſt numbers of tropic birds. The weſtern ſhore is flat, and the ground in general proper for cultivation. At the time of its laſt reduction by the Britiſh arms, 1000 hogſheads of ſugar were manufactured yearly. Long. 61. 6. W. Greenwich. Lat. 16. N.

MARIENWERDER, a town of Pruſſia, in the province of Oberland, ſituated on a ſmall river, called the Leibe, not far from the Viſtula. It was formerly the reſidence of the biſhops of Pomeſania, and of ſome grand maſters of the Teutonic order. Marienwerder was at firſt built in the year 1233, on a werder or ſmall iſland called Quidzin; but was ſoon after rebuilt on its preſent ſituation. The cathedral, which was erected about the thirteenth century, is the largeſt church in the kingdom of Pruſſia, being 320 feet long; and by its ſtrong breaſt-works ſeems to have formerly ſerved for a fortreſs. The palace at Marienwerder is ſpacious, and built in the old Gothic taſte. The adjacent country is very pleaſant, and full of eminences and gentle declivities. The inhabitants carry on a conſiderable trade with their neighbours. In the year 1723, ſalt-works were ſet up here, and a magazine for corn and forage in 1728. This town has often been damaged by inundations, war, and fire. The famous league formed by the towns and country, againſt the knights of the Teutonic order, was concluded here in 1440. This town held out againſt a vigorous ſiege in 1520; and in the year 1613, it was for ſome time the reſidence of the elector John Sigiſmund. In 1709, the Czar Peter the Great, and Frederick I. king of Pruſſia, had an interview at this place. King Staniſlaus retired to this town from Dantzic, in July 1734: 35 miles S. Dantzic, and 44 NNE. MARSEILLES, a city of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Mouths of the Rhône, ſituated near the coaſt of the Mediterranean. It is large, rich, and the moſt ancient place in all this province, is ſaid to have been built by the Phocians, and to have exiſted 500 years before the birth of Chriſt. It is ſeated at the foot of a rocky mountain, near the ſea, being divided into the Old and New Town. The former lies on an eminence, conſiſting of narrow crooked ſtreets, with mean houſes; whereas, in the latter, the ſtreets are ſtraight and broad, and adorned with handſome edifices. Before the revolution, this city was the reſidence of a bailiwick, and the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan to the archbiſhop of Arles, who has a dioceſe, containing thirty-ſix pariſhes, with an annual revenue of 30,000 livres. In it was alſo a mintage, together with four pariſh churches, including the cathedral and two collegiate ones, with two abbies, an academy of the beaux arts, and an obſervatory. It contains a large arſenal, well ſtored with all the implements for fitting out the gallies. The large armory here, which conſiſts of four walks croſſwiſe, and is accounted the fineſt in the whole kingdom, contains arms for 40,000 men. In the arſenal is a dock for building the gallies. This is roofed over, and communicates with the harbour, which is a parallelogram, having public and private buildings on the two long ſides, and one of the ſhorter. The other ſide is the iſſue into the Mediterranean, which is defended, on each point, by a ſtrong fort. The entrance into the harbour, on account of a rocky cape near it, is difficult, and has not depth of water enough for men of war. Gold and ſilver ſtuffs are made here. In the year 1720, this city was viſited by a moſt deplorable peſtilence, which raged till 1722. It is ſaid to contain 90,000 inhabitants: 7½ poſts WNW. Toulon, and 101¼ SSE. Paris. Long. 23. 3. E. It is a very ancient ſtaple town, ſituated on the ſea coaſt, with a ſpacious, deep, and ſecure harbour, into which there is an entrance on the north and ſouth ſide, and it is defended by the ſtrong citadel of Carlſtein. It has, indeed, many conſiderable privileges; but, partly by the calamities of war, during the years 1676 and 1719, and partly by the fires which broke out in 1683 and 1699, it is in ſo declining a condition, that, in the year 1747, it had but twenty poor burghers, and the poll tax regiſter contained only ſixty-five perſons: however, it conſiſts of 200 ruinous and almoſt uninhabited houſes: 18 miles NW. MARTINICO, an iſland in the Weſt Indies. This iſland is ſixteen agues in length, and forty-five in circumference, leaving out the capes, hich ſometimes extend two or three leagues into the ſea. It is very unven, and interſected in all parts by a number of hillocks, which are oſtly of a conical form. Three mountains riſe above theſe ſmaller emiences. The higheſt bears the indelible marks of a volcano. The woods ith which it is covered, continually attract the clouds, which occaſions oxious damps, and contributes to make it horrid and inacceſſible, while e two others are in moſt parts cultivated. From theſe mountains, but hiefly from the firſt, iſſue the many ſprings that water the iſland. heſe waters, which flow in gentle ſtreams, are changed into torrents n the ſlighteſt ſtorm. Their quality partakes of the nature of the ſoil ey paſs through ; in ſome places they are excellent, in others ſo bad, at the inhabitants are obliged to drink the water they have collected n the rainy ſeaſon. The French were the firſt Europeans who formd a ſettlement, under the conduct of M. Deſnambuc, who brought bout one hundred perſons from St. Chriſtopher's, in the year 1635; d obtained land of the Caribbs : they lived quietly for ſome time, t animoſities afterwards enſuing, ended with the extirpation or baiſhment of the natives. The French, by this retreat, now become ſole aſters of the iſland, lived quietly upon thoſe ſpots which beſt ſuited thei lantations. They all confined themſelves at firſt to the cultivation of obacco and cotton, to which was ſoon added that of the arnotto and digo. That of ſugar was not begun till about the year 1650. Benjain Dacoſta planted ſome cocoa-trees ten years after. His example was ot followed till 1684, when the chocolate grew more common in France. ocoa then became the chief dependance of the coloniſts, who had not a fficient fund to undertake ſugar plantations. One of thoſe calamities hich ariſe from the ſeaſons, and which ſometimes affect men, and ſomeimes vegetables, deſtroyed all the cocoa-trees, in 1718. This ſpread a eneral conſternation among the inhabitants of Martinico. The coffeeee was then propoſed to them, as a plank is held out to mariners after a ipwreck. The French miniſtry had received, as a preſent from the utch, two of theſe trees, which were carefully preſerced in the king's otanical garden. Two ſhoots were taken from theſe, and carried to artinico. Independent of this reſource, Martinico was poſſeſſed of hoſe natural advantages which ſeemed to promiſe a ſpeedy and great roſperity. Of all the French ſettlements, it was the moſt happily ſituted with regard to the winds that prevail in thoſe ſeas. Its harbours oſſeſs the ineſtimable advantage of affording a certain ſhelter from the urricanes which annoy theſe latitudes. Its ſituation having made it the at of government, it has obtained the greateſt marks of favour, and njoyed the ableſt and moſt upright adminiſtration of them all. Notithſtanding all theſe advantages, Martinico, though in greater forwardeſs than the other French colonies, had made but little progreſs at the end f the laſt century. In 1700, it contained but 6597 white men, in all. he ſavages, mulattoes, and free negroes, men, women, and children, mounted to no more than 507. The number of ſlaves was but 14,566. ll theſe together made a population of 21,640 perſons. The whole of he cattle was 3668 horſes or mules, and 9217 head of horned cattle. hey grew a great quantity of cocoa, tobacco, and cotton, and had nine ndigo houſes, and one hundred and eighty-three ſmall ſugar planations. In 1736, there were 447 ſugar works; 11,953,232 coffeerees; 193,870 of cocoa; 2,068,480 of cotton; 39,400 of tobacco; 6750 f arnotto. The ſupplies for proviſions conſiſted of 4,806,142 banana rees; 34,483,000 trenches of caſſava, and 247 plots of potatoes and ams. The population amounted to 72,000 blacks, men, women, and chilren. Their labour had improved the plantations as far as was conſiſtent with he conſumption then made in Europe of American productions, and the nhabitants exported annually to the amount of 700,000l. ſterling. This extenſive trade annually brought into the ports of the iſland 200 ſhips om France, fourteen or fifteen fitted out by the mother country for the coaſt of Guinea, ſixty from Canada, ten or twelve from the iſlands of Margaretta and Trinidad; beſides the Engliſh and Dutch ſhips that came to carry on a ſmuggling trade. The private navigation from the iſland to the northern colonies, to the Spaniſh continent, and to the Windward Iſlands, employed 130 veſſels, from twenty to ſeventy tons burthen, manned with 600 European ſailors, of all nations, and 1500 ſlaves, long inured to the ſea ſervice. The war of 1744, put a ſtop to this proſperity. The few ſhips that came from France, in order to compenſate the hazards they were expoſed to by the loſs of their commodities, ſold them at a very advanced price, and bought them at a very low one. By this means, the produce decreaſed in value, the lands were but ill cultivated, the works neglected, and the ſlaves periſhing for want. Martinico had not yet repaired her loſſes during the peace, nor paid off the debts which a ſeries of calamities had obliged her to contract, when war, the greateſt of all evils, broke out afreſh. A ſeries of misfortunes for France, after repeated defeats and loſſes, made Martinico fall into the hands of the Engliſh. It was reſtored in July, 1763, ſixteen months after it had been conquered, but deprived of all the neceſſary means of proſperity that had made it of ſo much importance. In 1769, France imported from Martinico, upon 202 trading veſſels, 177,116 quintals of fine ſugar, and 12,579 quintals of raw ſugar; 68,518 quintals of coffee; 11,731 quintals of cocoa; 6048 quintals of cotton; 2518 quintals of caſſia; 783 caſks of rum; 307 hogſheads of molaſſes; 150 pounds of indigo; 2147 pounds of preſerved fruits; 47 pounds of chocolate; 282 pounds of raſped tobacco; 494 pounds of rope yarn; 234 cheſts of liqueurs; 234 hogſheads of molaſſes, &c.; 451 quintals of wood for dying; and 12,108 hides in the hair. All theſe productions together have been bought in the colony itſelf for 536,631l. ſterling. It is true, that the colony has received from the mother country to the amount of 588,412l. merchandiſe, but part of this has been ſent away to the Spaniſh coaſts, and another part has been conveyed to the Engliſh ſettlements. In the year 1794, Martinico was taken by the Britiſh, under the command of Sir John Jervis and Sir Charles Grey; the attack commenced the 3d of February, and the iſland ſurrendered on the 16th of March. Long. 61. 2. to 61. 26. MARSEILLES, a city of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Mouths of the Rhône, ſituated near the coaſt of the Mediterranean. It is large, rich, and the moſt ancient place in all this province, is ſaid to have been built by the Phocians, and to have exiſted 500 years before the birth of Chriſt. It is ſeated at the foot of a rocky mountain, near the ſea, being divided into the Old and New Town. The former lies on an eminence, conſiſting of narrow crooked ſtreets, with mean houſes; whereas, in the latter, the ſtreets are ſtraight and broad, and adorned with handſome edifices. Before the revolution, this city was the reſidence of a bailiwick, and the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan to the archbiſhop of Arles, who has a dioceſe, containing thirty-ſix pariſhes, with an annual revenue of 30,000 livres. In it was alſo a mintage, together with four pariſh churches, including the cathedral and two collegiate ones, with two abbies, an academy of the beaux arts, and an obſervatory. It contains a large arſenal, well ſtored with all the implements for fitting out the gallies. The large armory here, which conſiſts of four walks croſſwiſe, and is accounted the fineſt in the whole kingdom, contains arms for 40,000 men. In the arſenal is a dock for building the gallies. This is roofed over, and communicates with the harbour, which is a parallelogram, having public and private buildings on the two long ſides, and one of the ſhorter. The other ſide is the iſſue into the Mediterranean, which is defended, on each point, by a ſtrong fort. The entrance into the harbour, on account of a rocky cape near it, is difficult, and has not depth of water enough for men of war. Gold and ſilver ſtuffs are made here. In the year 1720, this city was viſited by a moſt deplorable peſtilence, which raged till 1722. It is ſaid to contain 90,000 inhabitants: 7½ poſts WNW. Toulon, and 101½ SSE. Paris. Long. 23. 3. E. Ferro. Lat. 43. 17. N.

MARTINICO, an iſland in the Weſt Indies. This iſland is ſixteen leagues in length, and forty-five in circumference, leaving out the capes, which ſometimes extend two or three leagues into the ſea. It is very uneven, and interſected in all parts by a number of hillocks, which are moſtly of a conical form. Three mountains riſe above theſe ſmaller eminences. The higheſt bears the indelible marks of a volcano. The woods with which it is covered, continually attract the clouds, which occaſions noxious damps, and contributes to make it horrid and inacceſſible, while the two others are in moſt parts cultivated. From theſe mountains, but chiefly from the firſt, iſſue the many ſprings that water the iſland. Theſe waters, which flow in gentle ſtreams, are changed into torrents on the ſlighteſt ſtorm. Their quality partakes of the nature of the ſoil they paſs through; in ſome places they are excellent, in others ſo bad, that the inhabitants are obliged to drink the water they have collected in the rainy ſeaſon. The French were the firſt Europeans who formed a ſettlement, under the conduct of M. Deſnambuc, who brought about one hundred perſons from St. Chriſtopher's, in the year 1635; and obtained land of the Caribbs: they lived quietly for ſome time, but animoſities afterwards enſuing, ended with the extirpation or baniſhment of the natives. The French, by this retreat, now become ſole maſters of the iſland, lived quietly upon thoſe ſpots which beſt ſuited thei plantations. They all confined themſelves at firſt to the cultivation of tobacco and cotton, to which was ſoon added that of the arnotto and indigo. That of ſugar was not begun till about the year 1650. Benjamin Dacoſta planted ſome cocoa-trees ten years after. His example was not followed till 1684, when the chooclate grew more common in France. Cocoa then became the chief dependance of the coloniſts, who had not a ſufficient fund to undertake ſugar plantations. One of thoſe calamities which ariſe from the ſeaſons, and which ſometimes affect men, and ſometimes vegetables, deſtroyed all the cocoa-trees, in 1718. This ſpread a general conſternation among the inhabitants of Martinico. The coffee-tree was then propoſed to them, as a plank is held out to mariners after a ſhipwreck. The French miniſtry had received, as a preſent from the Dutch, two of theſe trees, which were carefully preſerced in the king's botanical garden. Two ſhoots were taken from theſe, and carried to Martinico. Independent of this reſource, Martinico was poſſeſſed of thoſe natural advantages which ſeemed to promiſe a ſpeedy and great proſperity. Of all the French ſettlements, it was the moſt happily ſituated with regard to the winds that prevail in thoſe ſeas. Its harbours poſſeſs the ineſtimable advantage of affording a certain ſhelter from the hurricanes which annoy theſe latitudes. Its ſituation having made it the ſeat of government, it has obtained the greateſt marks of favour, and enjoyed the ableſt and moſt upright adminiſtration of them all. Notwithſtanding all theſe advantages, Martinico, though in greater forwardneſs than the other French colonies, had made but little progreſs at the end of the laſt century. In 1700, it contained but 6597 white men, in all. The ſavages, mulattoes, and free negroes, men, women, and children, amounted to no more than 507. The number of ſlaves was but 14,566. All theſe together made a population of 21,640 perſons. The whole of the cattle was 3.68 horſes or mules, and 9217 head of horned cattle. They grew a great quantity of cocoa, tobacco, and cotton, and had nine indigo houſes, and one hundred and eighty-three ſmall ſugar plantations. In 1736, there were 447 ſugar works; 11,953,232 coffee-trees; 193,870 of cocoa; 2,068,480 of cotton; 39,400 of tobacco; 6750 of arnotto. The ſupplies for proviſions conſiſted of 4,806,142 banana trees; 34,483,000 trenches of caſſava, and 247 plots of potatoes and yams. The population amounted to 72,000 blacks, men, women, and children. Their labour had improved the plantations as far as was conſiſtent with the conſumption then made in Europe of American productions, and the inhabitants exported annually to the amount of 700,000l. ſterling. This extenſive trade annually brought into the ports of the iſland 200 ſhips from France, fourteen or fifteen fitted out by the mother country for the coaſt of Guinea, ſixty from Canada, ten or twelve from the iſlands of Margaretta and Trinidad; beſides the Engliſh and Dutch ſhips that came to carry on a ſmuggling trade. MARYBOROUGH, a town of Ireland, in Queen's County, not large, but conſiderable for its woollen manufactures. It is the county town, and ſends two members to the Iriſh parliament: 48 miles N. Waterford, and 43 SW. Dublin.

MARYLAND, one of the United States of America, bounded on the north by Pennſylvania, on the eaſt by the ſtate of Delaware, on the ſouth by the ſea and the ſtates of Virginia, and on the weſt by Virginia. It contains about fourteen thouſand ſquare miles, of which it is ſuppoſed one-ſixth is water, and is divided into eighteen counties, and is ſeparated into the eaſt and weſt diviſions by the Cheſapeak Bay. The ſettlement of this ſtate was made, at firſt, with about 200 perſons, all Roman Catholics, and moſt of them of good families, under a charter granted to lord Baltimore, in the year 1632; but the proprietors very wiſely introduced a general toleration for all Chriſtians: a meaſure that greatly tended to the flouriſhing ſtate of the country. The lands next the ſea are low, but riſe gradually till they terminate in the Apalachian mountains. Great part of the country was covered with wood, till cut and cleared by the planters; but interſperſed with ſavannahs and meadows, watered with ſeveral ſmall ſtreams and ſprings. This colony, as it had for a long time, with Pennſylvania, the honour of being unſtained with any religious perſecution; ſo neither had they, nor the Pennſylvanians, ever, till inſtigated by European politics, been harraſſed by the calamities of any war, offenſive or defenſive, with their Indian neighbours, but had always lived in the moſt exemplary harmony with them. Indeed, in a war which the Indians carried on againſt Virginia, they, by miſtake, made an incurſion into the territories of Maryland, but were ſoon ſenſible of their error. Wheat and tobacco are the ſtaple commodities of Maryland. In the interior country, on the uplands, conſiderable quantities of hemp and flax are raiſed. As long ago as 1751, in the month of October, no leſs than ſixty waggons, loaded with flax-ſeed, came down to Baltimore from the back country. Among other kinds of timber, is the oak, of ſeveral kinds, which is of a ſtraight grain, and eaſily rives into ſtaves, for exportation. The black walnut is in demand for cabinets, tables, and other furniture. The apples of this ſtate are large, but mealy; their peaches in plenty, and good. From theſe the inhabitants diſtil cyder-brandy and peach-brandy. The foreſts abound with nuts of various kinds, which are collectively called maſts. On this maſt vaſt numbers of ſwine are fed, which run wild in the woods. Theſe ſwine, when fatted, are caught, killed, barrelled, and exported in great quantities. The number of inhabitants in the ſtate, including the negroes, is 260,000. The chief towns are Annapolis and Baltimore.

MARYLAND POINT, a point of United America, in the ſtate of Maryland, on the Potomak: 45 miles SSW. Annapolis.

MARYPORT, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Cumberland, ſituated at the mouth of a river, on the coaſt of the Iriſh Sea, with a weekly market on Friday. The harbour is capable of great improvement, and will at preſent contain about 150 veſſels. It contains about 400 houſes; and, by a late accurate ſurvey, the number of inhabitants amounted to about 2625. There are 87 veſſels, from 50 to 300 tons burthen, moſtly employed in the coal or coaſting trade; and a few of the ſtouteſt of them go generally in the ſummer to the Baltic, or different ports in the eaſt. There are no manufactures here at preſent, and its chief dependence is on the coal trade: 9 miles NW. Cockermouth, and 308 N. London.

MASAFUERO, an iſland in the South Pacific Ocean, ſituated to the weſt of Juan Fernandes, both being nearly in the ſame latitude, and, by the globe, it is diſtant about 31 leagues. It is very high and mountainous, and at a diſtance appears like one hill or rock: it is of a triangular form, and about ſeven or eight leagues in circumference. The ſouth part is much the higheſt: on the north end there are ſeveral ſpots of clear ground, which perhaps might admit of cultivation. The author of the account of Lord Anſon's Voyage, mentions only one part of this iſland as affording anchorage, which is on the north ſide, and in deep water, but captain Carteret ſays he ſaw no part where there was not anchorage: on the weſt ſide, in particular, there is anchorage at about a mile from the ſhore in 20 fathom, and about two miles in 40 and 45 fathom, with a fine black ſand at the bottom. There is plenty of wood and water all round the iſland, but they are not to be procured without much difficulty: a great quantity of ſtones, and large fragments of the rock have fallen from the high land, all round the iſland, and upon theſe there breaks ſuch a ſurf, that a boat cannot ſafely come within a cable's length of the ſhore. Long. 80. 46. MASCATE, or Maſkat, a town of Arabia. This is the principal town of the province of Oman, ſo that the ſchiech or iman is by many travellers called king of Maſcate. It ſtands at one end of a beautiful plain, beſide a ſmall gulf, encompaſſed with ſteep rocks, forming an excellent harbour, in which the largeſt veſſels may find ſhelter. This harbour is likewiſe protected by forts, and the city thus fortified both by art and nature. Arrian calls it Moſca, and ſpeaks of it as being, even then, a great emporium of the trade of Arabia, Perſia, and India. Maſcate has ever enjoyed this advantage, and even at preſent poſſeſſes a conſiderable trade. The Portugueſe made themſelves maſters of it in 1508. Two churches, one of which is now a magazine, and the other the houſe of the wali, or governor, ſtill remain, to ſhow that they were once eſtabliſhed here. A hundred and fifty years after their conqueſt of Maſcate, the Portugueſe were driven hence by the Arabs, through the treacherous aid of a Banian, who had been robbed of his daughter by the Portugueſe governor. In no other Mahometan city are the Banians ſo numerous as in Maſcate; their number in this city amounts to no fewer than 1200. They are permitted to live agreeably to their own laws, to bring their wives hither, to ſet up idols in their chambers, and to burn their dead. At Maſcate, Europeans pay five per cent. upon imports; Mahometans ſix and a half, and Jews and Banians ſeven per cent. The iman's natural ſubjects pay ſix per cent. in kind, upon dates exported; which are the principal article that the country affords: 220 miles SSE. Gamron, and 940 E. Mecca. Long. 74. 50. E. MASOVIA, or Maſuren, a province of Poland, one of the moſt ancient, and one of the laſt that remained annexed to the crown. This country has, from the beginning of the Poliſh monarchy, been conſidered as a part of that kingdom. And though the inhabitants revolted, on the deceaſe of Mieczeſlaus II. Caſimir I. ſoon reduced them to obedience. In the partition which Boleſlaus III. made of the Poliſh dominions, between his four ſons, in 1138, Maſovia was given to his ſecond ſon (afterwards Boleſlaus IV.) who was ſucceeded by his ſon Leſco. The latter bequeathed it to Caſimir, his father's brother, and after this, it devolved by inheritance on Caſimir's youngeſt ſon, Conrad. Hence it appears, that this province had its own dukes for a long time. Duke Wenceſlaus became a vaſſal to John, of Bohemia, in the year 1329, but Charles, that monarch's ſon, having transferred the ſovereignty of Maſovia to Caſimir the Great, king of Poland, Siemonit, duke of Maſovia, was obliged to be inveſted with this country as a fief dependent on Poland. In the year 1526, the male line of the dukes of Maſovia being extinct, the duchy became immediately ſubject to Poland. And though king Sigiſmund I. was ſtrongly importuned to make his ſon, Sigiſmund Auguſtus, duke of Maſovia, he could not be prevailed on; but that monarch, having firſt confirmed the rights and laws of the inhabitants, annexed it to Great Poland, in 1529. King Stephen, in 1576, endowed Maſovia with the ſame rights and privileges as the reſt of the kingdom; but permitted the inhabitants to retain ſome of their ancient cuſtoms. This province has been twice given to the queens of Poland as a dowry; and for ſome time was governed by a ſtatthalter appointed by the king. But in 1576, the woiewoda of Maſovia was placed on the ſame footing with the other palatines. No other religion but Popery is tolerated in this province; thoſe of other profeſſions being treated with the greateſt ſeverity: for if a Lutheran or Calviniſt miniſter be found in Maſovia, his puniſhment was death. Staravolſcius computed the number of noble families in this country to be, in his time, no leſs than 45,000. Maſovia conſiſts of two palatinates, which are Czerſk, or Maſovia Proper, and Polotſk. Warſaw is the chief city.

MASQUE POCONA, a juriſdiction of Peru, in the government of Charcas, extending about 25 leagues. The air is hot, but not too great for vines. The town of the ſame name, where the biſhop of Santa Cruz de la Sierra reſides, is very thinly inhabited; but here are in other parts of the juriſdiction, ſeveral populous towns. The vally in which it ſtands is above eight leagues in circuit, producing all kinds of grain and fruits: and the woods and uncultivated mountains afford great quantities of honey and wax, which conſtitute a principal branch of its trade: 90 miles SSW. MATLOCK, a village of England, in the county of Derby, where is a medicinal ſpring, efficacious in cholicky, conſumptive, and cutaneous caſes, and much frequented by the neighbouring gentry as an agreeable retreat during the ſummer months for health and amuſement, without the infection of ſouthern manners. Here are two baths : the old bath, as it is called, though there had been a bath at the place long before, was built in 1734, the houſe belonging to it is the largeſt and moſt frequented, though the new one has a handſome houſe, in a pleaſanter ſituation. The baths are temperate, and the water lighter than common water. It was firſt known about 1698. There is a hot ſpring in a hill beyond the old bath, but notwithſtanding all attempts to prevent it, it mixes with a cold one in its way to the river. Here is a water of a ſtrong petrifying quality ; a large ſtratum formed by which is uſed for building, and is very ſerviceable. Matlock Great Tor is 140 yards perpendicular. Near Matlock bridge, are two chalybeate ſprings : 17 miles N. Derby, and 143 N. London.

MAURITIUS, or Iſland of France, an iſland in the Indian Sea, firſt diſcovered by the Dutch, in the year 1598, who gave it the name of Mauritius, in honour of the prince of Orange. The climate is pretty warm, but, notwithſtanding, very wholeſome; the air ſerene, and very little expoſed to hurricanes. The ſoil is, generally ſpeaking, red and ſtony, tho' mountainous towards the ſea coaſts, but within land there are many ſpots both flat and fertile. The whole extent of the iſland is about 50 leagues, and the form nearly circular. Some of the mountains are prodigiouſly high, and their ſummits covered with ſnow all the year round. The whole iſland is well watered. It produces all the trees, fruits, and herbs which grow in this part of the globe, and in great plenty; but it was, and ſtill is, famous for its ebony, eſteemed the moſt ſolid, cloſe, and ſhining of any in the world. Beſides the black, which is the moſt valuable, and indeed particularly diſtinguiſhed in Europe by that name, there are alſo trees of the ſame kind which are red, and others of a citron colour. Groves of oranges, both ſweet and ſour, are common as well as citrons; and the pine-apple grows ſpontaneouſly in very great perfection. It is true, they have but very little rice, or indeed any other grain; but this defect is, in ſome meaſure, ſupplied by admirable potatoes and other nouriſhing roots, but more eſpecialy of late by the planting of manioc or caſſava from Braſil. There is a ſufficient quantity of black cattle, and plenty of veniſon, with wild fowl in abundance, of different kinds. It is ſaid not to harbour either ſerpent, frog, toad, or other venomous animal. The moſt diſagreeable creatures were bats of a prodigious ſize, which ſome old writers of voyages ſtyle flying cats; but theſe are, in ſome meaſure, extirpated. The Dutch in the ſecond voyage they made to the Eaſt Indies, under the command of the admiral James Cornelius Vanneck, went thither, on the 18th of September, 1598, with five ſhips, and anchored in a ſafe port, capable of containing 50 large veſſels. They found the country, which probably had been for many years undiſturbed, abounding with cattle, fowl, fiſh, and fruits; ſo that they landed ſuch of the crews as were ſick, who ſpeedily recovered; and having ſupplied themſelves with all kinds of refreſhments, and beſtowed the name of Warwick's Haven on the port where they anchored, in honour of their vice-admiral, they continued their voyage, and entered as an uſeful obſervation in their journals, that this iſland might be as commodiouſly viſited by outward-bound ſhips, as that of St. Helena in their return: but though many of their countrymen reaped the benefit of this advice, and tho' they named this iſland after prince Maurice of Naſſau, yet it was near 40 years before they thought of ſettling there; and were then juſt beforehand with the French, who actually ſent a veſſel thither from Dieppe for the like purpoſe, who found the Dutch in poſſeſſion, and very buſy in raiſing a fort, that might command the haven, and the place where ſhips took in water. About the year 1640, the Dutch had two or three little ſettlements, beſides their fort, upon the iſland; but wanting ſlaves to cultivate their plantations, they ſent over a bark to Madagaſcar, where the French had juſt begun to plant, and prevailed upon the governor, and another officer, to ſteal 50 blacks, of thoſe that were ſettled under their protection, which ſcandalous breach of faith proved the ruin of both colonies; for the people of Madagaſcar never had any confidence in the French afterwards, and as for the negroes that were carried to Mauritius, moſt of them fled into the woods and mountains, where they became what in the Weſt Indies they call Maroons, that is, outlaws or banditti; and as they readily afforded ſhelter to all who would join them, the Dutch, notwithſtanding they had a conſtant garriſon of fifty men in the fort, were continually expoſed to their inſults and depredations. After that, other ſettlements were formed, but about the beginning of the current century, the directors of the Dutch Eaſt India company, in Holland, reſolved to withdraw the colony; which was accordingly brought off, ſome ſay in 1703, and others, with more probability, in 1710. A few years after the Dutch had relinquiſhed the iſland, it was taken poſſeſſion of by the French, in whoſe hands it has been from that time. Long. 74. 5. E. Ferro. Lat. 20. 12. S.

MAY, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Chan-ſi: 12 miles NE. Sou-tcheou.

MAY, or Mayo, one of the Cape de Verd Iſlands. It is but ſmall, being no more than ſeven leagues in circumference, its form oval, with a variety of ſharp rocks and points, projecting into the ſea above a mile. La Croix, Davity, and Linſchoten, deſcribe it with dangerous ſhoals and ſand banks round the coaſt; notwithſtanding which, Dampier affirms, that he has coaſted it almoſt in a circle, and yet could never diſcover any thing dangerous, beſides the promontories, which render it hazardous to fall in at night too cloſe with the land. Mayo is raiſed conſiderably above the ſea, but level and plain, except two mountains of conſiderable height. The ſhore, according to the laſt-mentioned writer, is clear, with ſandy bays between the promontories, which afford good anchorage. On the weſt ſide of the iſland, where ſhips generally drop anchor, there is a large ſandy bay, and a ſand-bank forty paces wide, running near three miles along ſhore, within which is a large ſalt pond, contained between the riſing ſhore and the oppoſite ſand-bank. The whole ſalt pond is full two miles in length, and half a mile in breadth, but ſeldom filled with water. It is the north end which chiefly produces ſalt, that being never dry, though the water evaporates, and the ſalts form themſelves for the whole dry ſeaſon, that is, from November to the month of May. Formerly, the Engliſh drove ſo great a trade in this commodity, that a man of war was continually ſtationed for the protection of the ſhips employed in this article; but this guard-ſhip has been laid aſide for a number of years. The iſland of Mayo is a dry ſoil, conſiſting chiefly of ſand, or a looſe crumbling ſtone, without rivulets, ſprings, or any natural moiſture, except the dews of the night, and the ſhowers in the wet ſeaſon, which run off as faſt as they fall. In the whole iſland there is but one ſpring, and that in the very centre, running off in a ſmall ſtream through a vally confined by the hills. Hence it is that we may account for the barrenneſs of the iſland, and why it produces no large trees, which can neither fix their roots in ſo looſe, or draw the neceſſary nouriſhment in ſo dry, a ſoil. The ſand-bank that forms the ſalt pond, produces a ſpecies of ſilk-cotton, that grows on a tender ſhrub, about four feet high, in pods of the ſize of a ſmall cucumber or bean. In Mayo are three ſmall towns, in which all the inhabitants of the iſland are contained. The chief fruits are figs, water-melons, a few citrons, and oranges, all of them bad in their kinds, and pompions, which ſerve the natives for their ordinary diet, together with calavanas, or a ſpecies of bean, of which they are fond. The ſea is plentifully ſtocked with a variety of fiſh, mullets, dolphins, bonettoes, ſnappers, ſilver fiſh, porpuſſes, and a ſmall ſpecies of whale, that commonly viſits the road every day in queſt of their prey, during the ſeaſon that the green turtle lay their eggs. Long. 22. 25. W. Greenwich. Lat. 15. 10. N.

MAYA, a town of Spain, in the province of Navarre: 21 miles N. Pamplona.

MAYAGUANA, one of the Bahama iſlands, 8 leagues in length. Long. 72. 15. to 72. 30. W. Greenwich. Lat. 22. 32. to 22. 44. N.

MAYALS, a town of Spain, in the province of Catalonia: 16 miles S. Lerida.

MAYAMBA, a town of Africa, and capital of a province of the ſame name, in the kingdom of Loango, near the Atlantic Ocean. The territory extends conſiderably eaſtwards within land, and hath a ſalt lake, above five leagues in compaſs, which empties itſelf into the ſea, by ſome rivulets, about half a league northward of Cape Negro. The town, or rather village, of Mayamba, extends a conſiderable length along the coaſt, but lies ſo low, that the inhabitants are frequently obliged to remove their habitations at high water, to ſome of the neighbouring high lands. The river Banna, which runs on the bank of the town, is ſaltiſh; the mouth of it affords a good fiſhery for oyſters, and, though ſhallow there, by reaſon of the ſands thrown into it by the tide, yet is deep, and wide enough to carry a great number of canoes, which bring the log-wood in great quantities into the port, from the province of Sette, where it grows in abundance, and makes the carriage of it from one to the other much eaſier and cheaper for the Portugueſe and others, who export it from thence; eſpecially as the river extends itſelf above fifty leagues within land. The territory of Mayamba is dry and ſandy, and produces little or no grain, but affords plenty of bananas and palm-trees, of the latter of which they make great quantities of excellent wine; and roots of maxondo, which they uſe inſtead of bread. The lakes and rivers abound with fiſh, which is their chief food. The women fetch the oyſters out of the Banna, above mentioned, in large trays, which, being opened and ſmoked, will, like other fiſh dreſſed in the ſame way, continue good for ſeveral months. The people are very rude and ſavage. They have plenty of game, and hunt with their country dogs.

dogs, about whoſe necks they are obliged to hang wooden clappers, in order to follow them by the noiſe, they not being able to bark. The government of this province is commonly given to a counſellor of ſtate, called manihomba, or homma, who is alſo prince of Loangiri, and gives no other account to the king of Loango but of the log-wood, which pays ten per cent. In other caſes he is in ſome meaſure abſolute, and a tyrant over the people. Here was likewiſe formerly a great commerce for elephants' teeth, which alſo brought in a conſiderable income, but is now dwindled to little or nothing. Long. 30. 50. E. Ferro. Lat. 3. 20. S.

MAYANG, a river of China, in the province of Hou-quang, which runs into the Yuen, near Tching-ki.

MAYANG, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Hou-quang, on the river Mayang: 15 miles N. Hoang.

MAYENCE, ſee Mentz.

MAYENFELD, ſee Meyenfeld.

MAYENNE, a city of France, and capital of a department of the ſame name, near the river Mayenne, defended by a caſtle, on a rock. The number of inhabitants is about 6000: 4 poſts N. Laval, and 30¼ WSW. Paris. Long. 17. 3. E. Ferro. Lat. 48. 18. N.

MAYENNE, a river of France, which riſes near Linieres, in the department of the Charente, paſſes by Ambrier, Mayenne, Laval, Chateau-Gontier, &c. and joining the Sarte, about a league north from Angers, forms the Mayne, which joins the Loire about 1½ league below.

MAYENNE, a department of France, bounded on the north by the departments of the Channel and the Orne, on the eaſt by the department of the Sarte, on the ſouth by the Mayne and Loire, and on the weſt by the department of the Ille and Vilaine; about 45 miles from north to ſouth, and 30 from eaſt to weſt. Laval is the capital.

MAYEN'S ISLAND, or John Mayen's Iſland, an iſland lying ſouth-weſt of Spitzbergen. The ſea which waſhes its coaſt was formerly frequented by abundance of whales; but theſe fiſhes removing farther north, the iſland has been forſaken. A very high mountain, beginning near its northern extremity, called Beerenbergen, or Bear Mountain, extends quite acroſs the iſland, and may be ſeen 30 miles at ſea. Here are ſeveral good bays, and the land is habitable, abounding with fiſh and deer; but the vaſt quantities of ice floating on all ſides, eſpecially towards the eaſt, render it abſolutely inacceſſible in ſpring. Lat. 71. 13. MAYLLO, a town of Spain, in the province of Leon: 14 miles ESE. Ciudad Rodrigo.

MAYNAS, a juriſdiction of South America, in the audience of Quito. In its territory are the ſources of thoſe rivers which, after rapidly traverſing a vaſt extent, form, by their confluence, the famous river of the Amazons, known alſo by the name of Maranon. The ſhores of this, and the many other rivers which pay it the tribute of their waters, environ and pervade the government of Maynas. Its limits, both towards the north and ſouth, are little known, extending far into the countries of the wild Indians; and is ſeparated from the poſſeſſions of the Portugueſe, by the famous line of demarcation, or the boundary between thoſe countries belonging to Spain and Portugal. Its capital is San Franciſco de Borja, the reſidence of the governor, but the ſuperior reſides at Santiago de la Laguna.

MAYNBERG, a town and caſtle of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, and biſhopric of Wurzburg, ſituated on the Maine: 2 miles E. Schweinfurt.

MAYNBERNHEIM, a town of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, and marggraviate of Anſpach, near the Maine: 12 miles SE. Wurzburg, and 32 NNW. Anſpach.

MAYNE, a river of France, formed by the union of the Mayenne and Sarte, about a league to the north of Angers, which joins the Loire about 4 miles below.

MAYNE AND LOIRE, a department of France, ſo named from the union of the two rivers ſo called: it is bounded on the north by the departments of the Mayenne and Sarte, on the eaſt by the department of the Indre and Loire, on the ſouth by the department of the Vendée, the Two Sevres, and the Vienne, and on the weſt by the department of the Lower Loire; about 58 miles from eaſt to weſt, and 45 from north to ſouth. Angers is the capital.

MAYNE, a river of Ireland, in the county of Antrim, which runs into Lough Neagh, 1½ mile S. from Randalſtown.

MAYNOOTH, a neat well built town of Ireland, in the county of Kildare. A Roman Catholic college has been built here, inſtituted by act of parliament, (the firſt of the kind in the kingdom): it was opened for the admiſſion of ſtudents, in October, 1795, and inaugurated on the 1ſt of November following. It is a very elegant building, and bids fair to be of great advantage to the nation, as well as to individuals: 12 miles from Dublin.

MAYO, a county of Ireland, in the province of Connaught, bounded on the north by the Atlantic Ocean and the county of Sligo, on the eaſt by Roſcommon, on the ſouth by Galway, and on the weſt by the Atlantic Ocean; extending 49 miles from north to ſouth, and 44 from eaſt to weſt. It contains 68 pariſhes, about 27,970 houſes, and 140,000 inhabitants. The ſoil is various, in ſome places rugged and mountainous, producing little from cultivation, other parts are fertile, producing corn and flax ſufficient for the inhabitants, and feeding numbers of cattle for exportation. The weſtern coaſt is overſpread with mountains, ſcarcely inhabited. There are ſeveral excellent harbours along the coaſts, which are reſorted to by a vaſt number of ſmall veſſels in the herring-fiſhery ſeaſon from all parts of Galway and Mayo. Only four members are returned from Mayo, viz. two for the county, and two for Caſtlebar, the principal town.

MAYO, a village, or ſmall town of Ireland, in the county of that name: 9 miles SE. Caſtlebar.

MAYO, a province of North America, in New Mexico, bounded on the north by the province of Hiquion, on the eaſt by New Biſcay, on the ſouth by Cinaloa, and on the weſt by the Gulf of California.

MAYOR AND ALDERMEN, a cluſter of iſlands in the South Pacific Ocean, near the coaſt of New Zealand. Lat. 36. 57. S.

MAYORGA, a town of Portugal, in the province of Eſtremadura, on the weſt coaſt, near the Atlantic: 5 leagues SW. Leyria, and 17 N. Liſbon.

MAYOTTA, one of the Comora Iſlands, and the moſt ſoutherly of thoſe ſo called; about 240 miles from the coaſt of Africa, and 150 from the iſland of Madagaſcar. Long. 61. 10. E. Ferro. Lat. 13. 15. S.

MAYRI, a town of the iſland of Cuba: 85 miles SW. Havanna.

MAYZEROY, a town of France, in the department of the Moſelle, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Boulay: 2½ leagues SSW. Boulay, and 2¼ E. Metz.

MAZAGAN, a town of Africa, in the empire of Morocco, built by the Portugueſe, in 1506, and named by them Caſtillo Real. Under the walls of this place, on the north ſide, a dock has been made, which will admit ſmall veſſels; but large ſhips are obliged to anchor two leagues out at ſea, on account of the cape of Azamore, which ſtretches to the weſt, and which it would be difficult to double, if a ſouth-weſt wind ſhould drive them from their anchors. Mazagan was beſieged, without effect, in 1562, by the ſherif of Morocco, and remained in the poſſeſſion of the Portugueſe till 1769, when the emperor laid ſiege to it juſt as it was determined to be abandoned by the court of Liſbon. The town of Mazagan is at preſent entirely ruined, and almoſt uninhabited. The Moors have taken away the timber of the houſes, and left the walls ſtanding. At a little diſtance to the ſouth-weſt of Mazagan is an old tower, called Boriſba; whence the name of Bridja, which the Moors confound with that of Mazagan: 65 miles N. Morocco. Long. 9. E. Ferro. Lat. 32. 54. N.

MAZALIG, a town of Africa, in the country of Sugulmeſſa: 50 miles NE. Sugulmeſſa.

MAZAMET, a town of France, in the department of the Tarn, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Caſtres: 5½ leagues N. Carcaſſonne, and 3 SE. Caſtres.

MAZANDERAN, ſee Mezanderan.

MAZANSKAIA, a fort of Ruſſia, on the Volga: 16 miles NW. Tchernoijar.

MAZARA, a ſea-port town of Sicily, in the valley of Mazara, on the ſouth-weſt coaſt, built on the ruins of Selinuntum. It is the ſee of a biſhop: 50 miles SW. Palermo, and 153 W. Meſſina. Long. 30. 13. E. Ferro. Lat. 37. 42. N.

MAZARA (Valley of), the weſterly diviſion of the iſland of Sicily.

MAZARELLI, a town of Sicily, in the valley of Noto: 15 miles SW. Noto.

MAZARINO, a town of Sicily, in the valley of Noto: 6 miles SW. Piazza, and 15 NW. Calata Girone.

MAZATLAN, a town of Mexico, in the province of Chiametlan: 14 leagues NW. Chiametlan.

Mazé, a town of France, in the department of the Mayne and Loire, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Baugé: 3¾ leagues E. Angers, and 2½ SW. Baugé.

MAZERES EN FOIX, a town of France, in the department of the Arriege, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Mirepoix: 4½ leagues NNW. Mirepoix, and 8½ N. Taraſcon.

MAZIERA, or Midjare, an iſland in the Indian Sea, near the eaſt coaſt of Arabia, 60 miles long, and 8 wide. Long. 74. E. Greenwich. Lat. 20. N.

MAZIL, a town of the iſland of Cuba: 20 miles WSW. Bayamo.

MAZOUNA, a town of Africa, in the kingdom of Algiers: 64 miles ENE. Ouran.

MAZZO, a town of Italy, in the Valteline: 3 leagues W. Sondrio.

MAZZONO, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Lavora: 7 miles SW. Capua.

MEACO, or Kio, a town of Japan, in the iſland of Niphon, the ancient metropolis of the whole empire, and the reſidence of the ancient and preſent dairos, is ſituated near the middle of the ſouthern coaſt, in a fertile and ſpacious plain, ſurrounded at ſome diſtance by high mountains, for the moſt part covered with ſtately temples, monaſteries, burying places, and pleaſure-houſes, all of them adorned with gardens, orchards, and the greateſt variety of verdure, watered by a vaſt number of rivulets which come down from thoſe mountains. Three rivers unite their ſtreams in the centre of the city, whence the place is divided into Upper and Lower Towns. This twofold city appears, by the ſtately high walls of it, to have been about twenty miles in length, and nine or ten in breadth, when in its full ſplendour; beſides its large ſuburbs, and the imperial palace, which is a city by itſelf, and divided from the reſt. The ſtreets are generally narrow, but long and ſtraight, and ſo full of inhabitants, that, a public account being taken of them, according to their ſeveral ſects, the whole amount was found to be near 500,000, excluſive of the ſeveral thouſands that compoſe the dairo's court, and a much greater number of bonzas and nuns, who, on another liſt taken of the city, were found to amount to above 52,000, and the reſt of the inhabitants to 477,557; in all 529,726, excluſive ſtill of the dairo's court, and of an infinite multitude of ſtrangers, who flock to it from all parts of the empire. Its temples are numerous, and ſome of them magnificent beyond conception. Meaco, though much decayed in conſequence of what it ſuffered in the civil wars, from pillage, maſſacre, and conflagration, is ſtill the grand ſtorehouſe of all the manufactures of Japan, and of all foreign and home merchandize, and the principal ſeat of their commerce. Here they refine their metals, and coin their money, print books, and carry on all ſorts of manufactures; here they weave and dye the fineſt and richeſt ſilks and ſtuffs, make and ſell the moſt beautiful japan-work, porcelain, muſical inſtruments, paintings, carvings, all ſorts of gold, ſilver and copper work, in the greateſt perfection, but more particularly, ſteel of the fineſt temper and curious workmanſhip; all ſorts of gowns and other dreſſes, ready made for both ſexes, and an infinite variety of toys and trinkets: in a word, there is hardly any kind of commodity but is to be ſold at Meaco, nor any ſort of ingenious workmanſhip which they will not imitate. Long. 153. 30. E. Ferro. Lat. 35. 24. N.

MEADIA, a town of Hungary, in the bannat of Temeſvar, on a ſmall river which runs into the Danube, 12 miles N. Orſova, and 52 SE. Temeſvar.

MEAL BOWIE, a mountain of Scotland, in the county of Perth: 10 miles WNW. Crieff.

MEAL FOURWICK, a mountain of Scotland, in the county of Perth.

MEAL FRASHICH, a mountain of Scotland, in the county of Perth: 8 miles N. Dumblane.

MEALERUM, a mountain of Scotland, in the county of Perth: 4 miles S. George's Town.

MEAME, a river of North America, which runs into Lake Erie. Long. 83. 5. W. Greenwich. Lat. 42. 12. N.

MEAME FORT, a fort of North America, on the river Meame. Long. 84. 56. W. Greenwich. Lat. 41. 20. N.

MEANA, a town of the iſland of Sardinia: 21 miles SSW. Lode.

MEAN TALE POINT, a cape of England, on the coaſt of Cornwall: 5 miles NW. from the Lizard Point.

MEAO, one of the ſmall Molucca iſlands in the Eaſtern Indian Sea. Long. 127. 3. E. Greenwich. Lat. 1. 12. N.

MEARNS, ſee Kincardineſhire.

MEATH, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinſter, bounded on the north by the counties of Cavan and Monaghan, on the north-eaſt by Louth, on the eaſt by the Iriſh Sea, on the ſouth-eaſt by Dublin, on the ſouth by Kildare, and on the weſt by Weſt Meath; thirty miles from north to ſouth, and from twenty-five to thirty-five eaſt to weſt. It contains 147 pariſhes, about 22,468 houſes, and 112,400 ſouls. The ſoil of Meath is various, but generally rich, and a few coarſe hills, with very little waſte land: the bogs are neither numerous nor extenſive; conſequently, fuel is ſcarce and dear. Much coarſe linen is made in this county, but its principal ſources of wealth are derived from the flocks and herds that are fattened, and the abundance of corn that is raiſed on its fruitful plains. Fourteen members are returned to the Iriſh parliament, viz. for the county, Navan, Trim, Kells, Athboy, Ratoath, and Duleek, two each. Trim is the county town. Several ſmall biſhoprics were gradually united into one ſee, and received the name of Meath in the 12th century. There is no cathedral, and the epiſcopal palace is at a village called Ardbraccan, near the town of Navan.

MEAULNE, a town of France, in the department of the Allier, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Cerilly: 3 leagues W. Cerilly.

MEAUX, a town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Seine and Marne: before the revolution, this city was the ſee of a biſhop. It was erected into an earldom by Henry II. Its traffic conſiſts principally in grain, wool, and cheeſe. The reformation firſt ſhowed itſelf in this town in the time of Francis I: 6 poſts ENE. Paris. Long. 20. 32. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. N.—In the year 1421, this city was beſieged by Henry V. king of England. The ſiege commenced the 6th of October, and held out till May, 1422, when the garriſon ſurrendered at diſcretion. In the year 1438, it was retaken by the French, and reſiſted the endeavours made by lord Talbot to take poſſeſſion of it again.

MECATINA, an iſland in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Long. 59. 10. W. Greenwich. Lat. 50. 48. N.

MECCA, a city of Arabia, ſituated in the province of Hedjas, in a dry and barren country, about a day's journey from the Red Sea; a few leagues beyond it, nearer the high lands, however abundance of excellent fruits is to be found. In the ſummer months, the heat is exceſſive at Mecca; and to avoid and moderate it as much as poſſible, the inhabitants carefully ſhut their windows, and water the ſtreets. There have been inſtances of perſons ſuffocated in the middle of the ſtreets by the burning wind called Simoom, or Samiel. As a great part of the firſt nobility in Hedjas live at Mecca, the buildings are better here than in any other city in Arabia. Among its elegant edifices, the moſt remarkable is the famous Kaba, or Houſe of God, which was held in high veneration by the Arabians, even before the days of Mahomet. No Chriſtian dares enter Mecca; not that there is any ſuch expreſs prohibition in the laws of Mahomet, or that liberal-minded Mahometans could be offended, but the prejudices of the people, in general, with reſpect to the ſanctity of the place, make them think that it would be profaned by the feet of infidel Chriſtans. Although the Mahometans permit not Europeans to viſit Mecca, they make no difficulty of deſcribing the Kaba to them. Mr. Niebuhr obtained a drawing of that holy place; and he ſays, to judge from thoſe deſigns, and from the relations of many Muſſulmans of ſufficient veracity, the Kaba muſt be an aukward ſhapeleſs building: it is a ſort of ſquare tower, covered on the top with a piece of black gold embroidered ſilk ſtuff. This ſtuff is wrought at Cairo, and changed every year at the expence of the Turkiſh ſultan. The gutters upon this building are of pure gold. What ſeems to be moſt magnificent about this ſacred edifice is, the arcades around the ſquare in which the Kaba ſtands. They ſpeak in high terms of admiration, of a vaſt number of lamps and candleſticks of gold and ſilver, with which thoſe arcades are illuminated. However, even by theſe accounts, in which the truth is apparently exaggerated, the riches of the Kaba are far from equal in value to what is diſplayed in ſome Catholic churches in Europe. In the Kaba is particularly one ſingular relic, which is regarded with extreme veneration. This is the famous black ſtone, ſaid to have been brought by the angel Gabriel in order to the conſtruction of that edifice. The ſtone, according to the account of the clergy, was at firſt of a bright white colour, ſo as even to dazzle the eyes at the diſtance of four days' journey; but it wept ſo long, and ſo abundantly, for the ſins of mankind, that it became at length opaque, and at laſt abſolutely black. This ſtone, of ſo compaſſionate a character, every Muſſulman muſt kiſs, or at leaſt touch, every time he goes round the Kaba. The Arabs venerate the Kaba, as having been built by Abraham, and having been his houſe of prayer. Within the ſame incloſure is the well of Zemzem, valued for the excellence of its water, and no leſs for its miraculous origin. Hagar, when baniſhed by her maſter, ſet little Iſmael down here, while ſhe ſhould find ſome water to quench his thirſt. Returning after an unſucceſsful ſearch, ſhe was ſurpriſed to ſee a ſpring burſting up from the ground between the child's legs. That ſpring is the preſent well of Zemzem. The Mahometans have ſuch high ideas of the ſanctity of Mecca, that they ſuppoſe it even to extend to the environs of the city. Its territory is reputed ſacred to a certain diſtance round, which is indicated by marks ſet for this purpoſe. Every caravan finds one of theſe marks on their way, which warns the pilgrims to put on the modeſt garb which it becomes them to wear on that ſacred ground. Long. 56. 46. E. Ferro. Lat. 21. 47. MECHADEB, a town of Arabia, in the province of Yemen: 72 miles S. Sana. Long. 44. 15. E. Greenwich. Lat. 14. 7. N.

MECHERNICH, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and duchy of Juliers. It is a lordſhip, and pays two rix-dollars four kruitzers to the Imperial chamber: 4 miles W. Munſter Eyffel.

MECHET, a town of France, in the department of the Lower Charente: 1 league SE. Royan.

MECHLBECK, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Holſtein : 5 miles N. Itzehoa.

MECHLIN, ſee Malines.

MECHOACAN, a province of North America, in the audience of Mexico. It is bounded on the north by part of Guaſteca, and the provinces of Zacatecas and Guadalajara, on the eaſt by another part of Guaſteca and Mexico Proper, on the ſouth by the latter and the South Sea, which together with Xaliſco, bounds it alſo on the weſt and north-weſt. It extends ſeventy leagues along the coaſt, and ſtill farther inland. The climate is extremely good, and the ſoil remarkably fruitful. In this province are mines of ſilver, and a few of gold and copper. Among its numerous productions are the cacao, or chocolate-nut, the root mechoacan, ſeveral odoriferous gums and balſams, ſarſaparilla, ambergris, vanillas, caſſia, &c. The natives, now incorporated with the Spaniards, learn all kinds of trades, and are particularly curious in making cabinets, and weaving ſilk ; but their greateſt art is in making images of ſmall feathers, equal to the moſt exquiſite painting. The country is infeſted with foxes, ſquirrels, lions, wild dogs, and tygers. But it has alſo a numerous breed of excellent horſes for the ſaddle or harneſs ; and produces plenty of honey and wax ; and the ſeas and rivers are ſtored with excellent fiſh. Mechoacan was formerly a kingdom, but the Spaniards have reduced it into a biſhopric, in which are about 200 towns of converted natives. The greateſt part of the trade in this province is carried on by land, there being hardly any ſeaports deſerving that name.

MECHOACAN, or Valladolid, a town of North America, and capital of the province of Mechoacan, in the audience of Mexico, ſituated on a river near the weſt ſide of a lake which abounds with fiſh. It is a large place, the ſee of a biſhop, and beautifully decorated : 23 leagues W. Mexico. Long. 84. 55. W. Ferro. Lat. 20. 5. N.

MECKENHEIM, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, and archbiſhopric of Cologn, ſituated on the Erfft : 7 miles SSW. Bonn, and 18 S. Cologn. Long. 24. 29. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 40. N.

MECKLENBURG, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, ſituated in a duchy of the ſame name, anciently the capital of the Obotrites. Some old hiſtorians call it Megapolis, as generally ſuppoſed on account of its very great extent. Formerly it contained three convents ; and in 1058, a biſhopric was founded here. In 1164, Prebiſlau II. the laſt king of the Obotrites, made himſelf maſter of the town, and laid it in aſhes ; but in 1170, rebuilt it, though it never after attained its ancient proſperity, and, ſince the founding of Wiſmar, has inſenſibly ſunk to a village : 2 miles S. Wiſmar.

MECKLENBURG (Duchy of), a principality of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, including the duchies of Schwerin and Guſtro, bounded on the north by the Baltic, on the eaſt by Pomerania, on the ſouth by Brandenburg, and on the weſt by the territory of Lubeck and principality of Luneburg. With reſpect to the nature and goodneſs of the country, the Mecklenburghers themſelves diſagree ; ſome extolling it, and others again depreciating it. According to the remonſtrance of the nobility, in 1718, to the imperial court, againſt the contribution required of them, this country is full of large and ſmall lakes, from one to three German miles in length, and from one to one and a half broad, yielding alſo little or nothing. There are likewiſe large and deſolate heaths here, with moors, woods, fens, and quarries. One half of the country conſiſts of a ſandy ſoil, which, when aſſiſted with the beſt manure, will produce only a little rye and oats, and the paſtures and meadows make but a very indifferent appearance, if compared with thoſe of Holſtein and Pomerania; whence, of courſe, the graziery here is at a low ebb, and chiefly conſiſts in the breeding of ſheep. Of the other arable lands here, when well manured, one half, or, at beſt, a third, bears barley, but produces very little wheat. In general, the ſoil yields only four for one. But quite different is the account given us by Cluvier, in his deſcription of this duchy, and likewiſe in Franke's hiſtory of it. According to them, nearly one-tenth part of the country is ſandy, and the very worſt of the ſandy land in it produces excellent rye, and when it lies fallow, there cannot be better ſheep walks ; but the country, in general, is incomparable, and nothing in Pomerania or Holſtein (unqueſtionably they mean the champaign country there) can exceed it. When well tilled and dunged, it yields barley and wheat, and at the very leaſt produces fourfold, but generally five, ſix, or eight. The country is interſperſed with delightful eminences, very pleaſant and profitable woods, and good fruit-trees are not wanting in it. Several foreſts have been aſſorted, fens drained, and, together with moors and quarries, improved into arable and paſture land. The commons and meadows, in moſt parts, are not at all inferior to thoſe of Holſtein and Pomerania, and are capable ſtill of farther improvement. Its graziery, too, is ſo conſiderable, that the country annually exports ſome thouſands of cattle. The lakes and rivers yield large revenues, as they abound in fiſh, particularly in eels and cray-fiſh. It muſt be acknowledged that, by art and labour, the face of the country might be greatly improved. The principal rivers are the Elbe, Stor, Reckenitz, and Havel. In both duchies, excluſive of Roſtock, are 45 great and ſmall cities. Parchim, Guſtro, and New Brandenburg, are ſtyled the Vorderſtadt (or Metropoles) ; Parchim being indeed the capital of that of Wenden, and New Brandenburg of the Stargard. Each alſo convokes the towns of its own circle, preſides in the aſſembly, and acts in its name. The diets are annually ſummoned by the ſovereign, in order to ſettle the yearly contributions, or to iſſue proper directions relative to the taxes of the empire, circle, and portion of the princeſſes, and to deliberate on any neceſſary edicts ; as likewiſe, that all affairs or any grievances may be diſcuſſed under the prince's permiſſion. The inhabitants of both duchies are Lutherans. The churches and ſchools here are divided into ſix rural ſuperintendencies, and under their ſuperintendants are provoſts. In this country are alſo ſome Calviniſt congregations, and in Schwerin the Roman Catholics are permitted the private exerciſe of their worſhip. The towns have grammar-ſchools, and at Roſtock is an univerſity. The country is not without woollen manufacturers, tanners, leather-dreſſers, tobacco-ſpinners, and other trades, but the number of them is not ſufficient. Its exports are corn, flax, hemp, hops, wax, honey, cattle, butter, cheeſe, wool, and ſeveral kinds of wood. The Vandals having, in a great meaſure, quitted this country in the fifth century, the Wends gradually ſpread themſelves in the habitations which they had abandoned, and mingled with the remaining inhabitants. The moſt conſiderable tribe of the Wends, who ſettled here, was that of the Obotrites, which had its own particular princes. From theſe was deſcended Pribiſlau, who, in the 12th century, embraced the Chriſtian religion, rebuilt Mecklenburg, the ancient capital of the Obotrite princes, and took his title from it. His ſon, Henry Borwin, was father of two princes, John and Nikolot, the firſt of whom was the founder of the Mecklenburg line, and the latter that of Wenden, which becoming extinct in 1436, the principality of Wenden devolved to the Mecklenburg branch, which, in 1348, was raiſed to the dignity of duke by the emperor Charles IV. Duke John, who died in 1592, had two ſons, namely, Adolphus Frederick and John Albert II. who, inheriting the whole country in 1611, and more definitively in 1621, made a partition of it, by which the former was to obtain the Schwerin, and the latter the Guſtro part. But the town of Roſtock, with its univerſity and hoſpital, as likewiſe the monaſtic lands, remained in common, and were termed the Roſtock common places. At the peace of Weſtphalia, in 1648, the town of Wiſmar, with the bailiwicks of Pohl and Neucloſter, were ceded to the Swedes ; but on the other hand, the dioceſes of Schwerin and Ratzeburg were converted into temporary principalities, and the commanderies of Nemero and Miro, appertaining to the order of St. John of Malta, were likewiſe aſſigned to the dukes. The Guſtro line failed in 1695, on which duke Frederick William, of the Schwerin branch, laid claim to the ſole inheritance of the duchy of Guſtro, but his father's youngeſt brother, Adolphus Frederick, duke of Strelitz, oppoſed him. In 1701, however, this conteſt was adjuſted at Hamburg, by an agreement, importing, that the principality of Guſtro ſhould be added to his principality of Schwerin, and that duke Adolphus Frederick, beſides his duchy of Strelitz, ſhould hold alſo the principality of Ratzeburg, with the lordſhip of Stargard, the ancient commanderies of Miro and Nemero, and a yearly penſion of 9000 dollars in ſpecie, out of the Boitzenburg toll. At the ſame time, likewiſe, the right of primogenitureſhip, and the lineal ſucceſſion, was eſtabliſhed in both houſes, and the compact ratified by the emperor Leopold. There are ſtill ſubſiſting two lines of the dukes of Mecklenburg. The Schwerin line commenced in duke Frederick William. The Strelitz line commenced in duke Adolphus Frederic II. whoſe grandſon, duke Adolphus Frederick IV. entered on the government in 1752. The aſſeſſment for theſe countries, in the matricula of the empire, is 40 horſe and 67 foot, or 748 florins to a Roman month ; but from this ſum, by virtue of a decree of the diet, dated May 6, 1696, the portion payable by the towns of Wiſmar, and the bailiwicks of Poll and Neukloſter, is to be deducted from the houſe of Mecklenburg, and added to Sweden. To the chamber of Wetzlar its payment for the duchy of Schwerin is 243 rix-dollars 43½ kruitzers, and a like ſum alſo for the duchy of Guſtro. The annual revenues of the Schwerin line, ariſing from the demeſne bailiwicks and regalia here, are conſiderable, and duke Frederick William has publicly ſaid, that they brought him in 300,000 rix-dollars per annum. With reſpect to the revenues of the dukes of the Mecklenburgh Strelitz line, the Stargard circle, out of the land, and other taxes, produces annually between 70,000 and 80,000 rix-dollars. From the principality of Ratzeburg, and the Boitzenburg toll, out of which it levies 9000 dollars in ſpecie, the duke receives about 46,000 rix-dollars ; and conſequently, in the whole about 126,000 rix-dollars. The two duchies are divided into three circles, viz. Mecklenburg, Wenden, and Stargard.

MEKLENBURG, a county of Virginia.

MECKLENBURG, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Virginia : 70 miles SW. Richmond.

MECKLEY, a country of Aſia, bounded on the north by Thibet, on the eaſt by China, on the ſouth by Ava or Burma, and on the weſt by thick foreſts, which ſeparate it from Bengal ; about 350 miles in length, and 170 in breadth ; ſubject to the king of Ava. Long. 93. 20. to 98. 40. E. Greenwich. Lat. 22. 30. to 27. 20. N.

MECKMUHL, a town of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, and duchy of Wurtemberg, on the Jaxt: 32 miles NNE. Stuttgart, and 12 NNE. Heilbron. Long. 27. 1. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 14. N.

MECOBANISH, a lake of Canada. Long. 83. 45. W. Greenwich. Lat. 48. 58. N.

MECON, or Menan, a large river of Aſia, which riſes in the mountains of Thibet, between the 34th and 35th degrees of north latitude, and taking a direction ſouth, inclining a little to the eaſt, it paſſes through the Chineſe province of Yun nan, the kingdom of Laos, Cambodia, &c. and runs into the Eaſtern Sea, rather more than 200 miles ſouth of the city of Cambodia.

MECRAN, a province of Perſia, bounded on the north by Segeſtan and Candahar, on the eaſt by Hindooſtan, on the ſouth by the Indian Sea, and on the weſt by Kerman. It is the Gedroſia of the ancients. A chain of mountains croſſes it, and divides it into two almoſt equal parts. The ſouthern part is dry, and little more than a deſert, for 60 leagues together: the northern part is not ſo much ſo, but ſtill animals are rare, and the ſoil far from fertile. Water is ſcarce, and but few rivers are found. Deep and moving ſands often ſtop travellers in their journey, and ſometimes overwhelm them. Kidge is the capital.

MEDELPADIA, a province of Sweden, in the Nordland diviſion, about 90 miles in length, and 45 in breadth, ſituated on the weſt coaſt of the Gulf of Bothnia. Though this province is very mountainous and woody, yet it has ſeveral delightful vallies of arable and meadow land. The ſeed is not ſown here till about Whitſuntide; but the corn ripens in ten weeks. The foreſts abound in veniſon and game of all ſorts, as elks, rein-deers, beavers, martins, weaſels, lynxes, foxes, and wild fowl. This country alſo is agreeably interſperſed with lakes and rivers, which ſupply it with plenty of fiſh. The grain which grows in this province is ſufficient for the ſupport of its inhabitants. They have alſo plenty of cattle, and deal in timber, hops, flax, hemp, butter, fowls, and dried fiſh. Salmon, ſeals, &c. are alſo caught here. Medelpadia maintains its quota of ſailors. Sundſwell is the only ſeaport.

MEDEMBLICK, or Medenblick, a ſea-port town of Holland, at the entrance into the Zuyder Sea, ancient but not very large; before the cities of Enckhuyſen and Hoorn were built, the capital of North Holland; ſome derive its name from a river called Medemblach, which is not now exiſting, and aſſert that Radbode, a famous king of Frieſland, who lived in the eighth century, generally reſided in a caſtle near the harbour. In the year 1426, it was taken by the Quenemaers, a powerful faction; and by the Gueldrians in 1517, who reduced the whole town to aſhes, except the caſtle, which they were not able to take; it was ſoon rebuilt, and again burned down in 1547. The principal commerce carried on by the inhabitants is in timber, which they bring from Norway and other northern parts of Europe. The firſt veſſel from the States to the coaſt of Guinea ſailed from Medemblick in the year 1593, and returned with a rich cargo to Amſterdam. The country round about is remarkable for its rich paſtures. The land here is lower than the waters; for which reaſon, they have the ſtrongeſt dams or dykes in the whole country, to defend it from the fury of the waves, when the wind blows a ſtorm from the northwards. But in extraordinary ſtorms, when the water is as high as the dykes, and ready to run over or break them down, the inhabitants lay ſails along them, in order to weaken the force of the waves; by which means the dykes are ſo ſtrengthened, that they are very ſeldom broken. This town, as well as Hoorn and Enckhuyſen, have a right of coining money, but ſucceſſively, each having its turn for ſeven years: 15 miles NE. Alcmaer, and 26 N. Amſterdam. Long. 22. 27. E. MEDINA, a city of Arabia Felix, in the province of Hedjas, about a day's journey from the Red Sea. It is a town of moderate extent, ſurrounded with indifferent walls, and ſituated in a ſandy plain. It belongs to the ſherriffe of Mecca, but has of late been governed by a ſovereign of its own, of the family of Darü Barkad. At this preſent time, the ſherriffe rules it by a vizier, who muſt be of the royal family. Before the days of Mahomet, this city was called Jathreb, but it was called Medinet en Nebbi, the City of the Prophet, from the period at which Mahomet, upon his expulſion out of Mecca, by the Koreiſchites, took refuge here, and continued to make it the place of his reſidence for the reſt of his life. The tomb of Mahomet at Medina is held in reſpect by the Muſſulmans; but they are not obliged to viſit it in order to the performance of any devotional exerciſes; only, as the caravans from Syria neceſſarily paſs near by Medina, in their return from Mecca, they turn aſide to behold the Prophet's tomb. It is ſituate in a corner of the great ſquare; whereas the Kaba is in the middle of the great ſquare at Mecca. For fear that the people might ſuperſtitiouſly offer worſhip to the aſhes of the Prophet, the tomb is incloſed within iron rails, and is only to be ſeen by looking through theſe. This tomb is placed between two other tombs, in which reſt the aſhes of the two firſt caliphs. Although not more magnificent than the tombs of the founders of moſt other moſques, the building that covers it is hung with a piece of ſilk ſtuff, embroidered with gold, which is renewed every ſeven years, by the pacha of Damaſcus. This building is guarded by forty eunuchs, chiefly for the ſecurity of the treaſure which is ſaid to be kept in it. This treaſure conſiſts chiefly of precious ſtones, the offerings of rich Muſſulmans. An eminent Arabian merchant informed Mr. Niebuhr, that the guard was poſted for no other purpoſe but to keep off the populace, who had begun to throw dirt upon the tomb, which they afterwards ſcraped off, and preſerved as a ſort of relic: 176 miles N. Mecca. Long. 57. 10. E. Greenwich. Lat. 25. N.

MEISSEN, a marggraviate of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, founded in the 10th century. In the 15th it was bounded on the north-eaſt and ſouth by the duchy of Saxony, Luſatia, and Bohemia, towards the weſt it extended to Mulda, and ſometimes beyond. The marggraviates then alſo poſſeſſed Oſterland, of which the elector has now no part, which confines the extent to Luſatia, Bohemia, Franconia, Thuringia, the principality of Anhalt, and duchy of Saxony; no marggrave of Meiſſen is known, with any degree of certainty, before Rigda, who lived about the year 980, under the emperor Otto II. In the year 1422, it was united to the electorate of Saxony. The elector of Saxony has, as well on account of the marggraviate as the burggraviate of Meiſſen, ſued for two ſeparate ſeats and voices at the council of the princes of the empire, but has hitherto been refuſed. The marggraviate as far as it belongs to the electoral houſe of Saxony, compriſes it in the circle of Meiſſen, together with that of Leipzig, and the foundation of Wurzen, as alſo the circle of Erzebirg, the circle of Vogtland, and that of Neuſtadt, to which, moreover, are to be added the foundations of Merſeburg, and Naumburg-Zeitz.

MEISSEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and capital of a marggraviate of the ſame name, ſituated on the Elbe, where the ſmall river Meiſſe runs into it, which gives it its name. In the town of Meiſſen were formerly ſeveral juriſdictions, namely, that of the marggrave, who was poſſeſſed of the centre of the citadel; that of the biſhop, who was proprietor of the hindmoſt part; that of the burggrave who poſſeſſed the fore part; and that of the province of St. Afra. Out of theſe juriſdictions aroſe what are called the four prefecturates of Meiſſen, each of which has not a peculiar extent of country, ſubject to its office, but only certain villages which lie ſcattered up and down. The biſhopric here, which was firſt founded in the year 948, but in the year 968 was fully ſettled, and ceded in 1581, by the laſt biſhop thereof, namely John IX, of Haugwitz, to the elector Auguſtus, had a conſiderable ſpiritual juriſdiction belonging to it, which was divided into nine archdiaconates. By virtue of a ſtipulation made with the chapter in 1663, or of an abiding capitulation, an elector of Saxony, on entering upon his government, is conſidered at the ſame time as poſtulated biſhop of Meiſſen, renews and confirms the ſaid capitulation, and ſuffers himſelf to be done homage to thereupon. The burggravate which formerly exiſted here, has alſo ſometimes enjoyed princely dignity. To it belonged a part of the citadel of this place, together with the citadel of Frauenſtein, the county of Hartenſtein, the ſeigniory of Wildenfels, and a number of villages. By virtue of certain ſtipulations made with the laſt burggraves, in the years 1428, 1439, and 1546, it came all gradually to the electoral houſe, which, on account thereof, wants a peculiar place and voice at the council of the princes of the empire, but has hitherto obtained neither. Of the old citadel here, which ſtands on a mountain, the fore part, which belonged to the burggraves, and the hind part, which belonged to the biſhops, are now become ruinous, and the centre, or marggravial part, only ſtill remains, which is otherwiſe called Albretſchſburg, and in this part alſo is carried on the celebrated manufacture of the excellent Miſnian porcelain. At this place alſo is a manufacture of cloth. The firſt foundation of this town was begun by king Henry I. about the year 930. In the year 1545, duke Maurice eſtabliſhed a conſiſtory here, which was removed, by the elector Auguſtus, in 1580, to Dreſden. It is true, that the elector Chriſtian I. again erected a conſiſtory here in 1588, but in 1606, this was again entirely ſuppreſſed. In 1745, the Pruſſians had their head-quarters, and the head-hoſpital for their ſick at this place, and in 1757, they burnt down the wooden bridge here over the Elbe: 14 miles NW. Dreſden, and 44 E. Leipſic. Long. 31. 12. E. Ferro Lat. 51. 9. N.

MEISSENHEIM, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, and duchy of Deux Ponts, ſituated on the river Glan. It is a fief of the electorate of Mentz, 28 miles N. Deux Ponts, and 30 WSW. Mentz. Long. 25. 8. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 42. N.

Near it, on a high rock, ſtands an exempted cloyſter of Benedictines, which is rich and famous, and by reaſon of its natural ſituation alſo ſtrong, whence, in the year 1619, it held out a ſiege. On this rock anciently ſtood a citadel, which Leopold I. took in the tenth century, and having deſtroyed the works, ſettled twelve canons in it, who continued there till the year 1089, when Leopold III. removed them, and granted the cloyſter to ſome Benedictine monks. The library here is worthy notice, particularly for its manuſcripts: 10 miles W. St. Polten, and 12 E. Ips.

MELCOMB REGIS, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Dorſet, ſituated at the mouth of the river Wey, which parts it from Weymouth. It is a borough town, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament, which privilege it had before Weymouth. It was appointed a ſtaple, in the reign of Edward III. and in the next year the French burnt it, and it was thereby rendered ſo deſolate a place, that the remaining inhabitants prayed, and obtained a diſcharge from cuſtoms. On account of its quarrels with Weymouth, in the reign of Henry VI. its privileges as a port were removed to Pool; but in that of queen Elizabeth they were reſtored to it by act of parliament, which was confirmed in the next reign, on condition that Melcomb and Weymouth ſhould make but one corporation, and enjoy their privileges in common; and to this was owing the flouriſhing ſtate of both. In the two laſt reigns mentioned, a wooden bridge, within ſeventeen arches, was built from hence to Weymouth, to which, as well as its church, the chief contributors were certain citizens of London; and upon its decay it was rebuilt in 1770. It is united with Weymouth as a port, as a corporation, and as a market town, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament.

MELIN, a town of Croatia: 12 miles SSW. Varaſdin.

MELINDA, a kingdom of Africa, ſituated near the coaſt of the Indian Sea. This country is for the moſt part rich and fertile, producing almoſt all the neceſſaries of life, except wheat and rice, both which are brought thither from other parts; and thoſe who cannot purchaſe them, make uſe of potatoes in their ſtead, which are here fine, large, and in great plenty. They likewiſe abound with great varieties of fruit-trees, roots, plants, and other eſculents, and with melons of exquiſite taſte. The country is covered with citron trees, with whoſe odoriferous ſmell the air is agreeably perfumed almoſt all the year. They have alſo great plenty of veniſon, game, oxen, ſheep, geeſe, hens, and other poultry; and one breed of ſheep, whoſe tails weigh, in general, between twenty and thirty pounds. The inhabitants conſiſt of blacks, and people of all complexions, ſwarthy, tawny, and white. The women are moſtly of an olive complexion. Their dreſs is remarkably elegant, for they never ſtir out but in fine ſilks, girt with rich gold or ſilver girdles, collars and bracelets of the ſame, or ſomething more valuable, and their heads covered with veils. The men wear a kind of turban; in other reſpects their dreſs conſiſts of a piece of cotton wrapped about the middle, and deſcending a little below the knees; their legs, feet, and the reſt of the body, quite bare. As to the meaner ſort, as well as thoſe who live farther from the coaſts, they wear little elſe than a piece of cloth about their middle, if we except their ſhield and weapons, which are the bow and arrows, the ſcymitar, and the javelin. Their religion is variouſly deſcribed by authors; ſome repreſenting the people as altogether Mahometans, and others as idolaters. The truth is, there are ſome of both religions. The government is monarchical; and in ſuch veneration is the king held by his ſubjects, that whenever he ſtirs out from his palace, he is carried in a ſedan, the ſhoulders of four or more of the greateſt nobles of the kingdom; and incenſe and other perfumes are burned before him, as he goes along the ſtreets of any city, by a great number of ladies, who come to welcome him with ſongs in his praiſe, accompanied with ſeveral kinds of muſical inſtruments.

MELINDA, a city of Africa, and capital of a kingdom of the ſame name, near the coaſt of the Indian ſea; pleaſantly ſituated in a beautiful plain, ſurrounded by fine gardens and orchards, ſtored with all ſorts of fruit trees, eſpecially citrons and oranges. The houſes are built of ſquare ſtone, for the moſt part ſtately, and ſome even magnificent, and of them richly furniſhed, being inhabited chiefly by rich merchants, and much reſorted to by foreigners, who drive a great commerce in gold, copper, quickſilver, ivory, wax, and drugs, which are here exchanged ſilks, cottons, and linen cloths, corn, and other commodities. The only inconvenience attending this metropolis is, that the anchorage ſtands at ſome diſtance from it, on account of the rocks and ſhelves which ſurround it towards the ſea ſide, rendering the acceſs difficult and dangerous. The city is ſuppoſed by the learned to be the Mondel mentioned by Avicenna, as the place whence they had their aloes. Long. 58. E. Ferro. Lat. 2. 50. S.

MELROSE, a town of Scotland, in the county of Roxburg, on the Tweed. Melroſe has long been famed for linens, named Melroſe land-linens, for which commiſſions have been received from London and foreign countries. So far back as the year 1668, the weavers were incorporated under what is called a Seal of Cauſe, from John earl of Haddington, then lord of the lordſhip, and bailie principal of the regality of Melroſe; but for ſeveral years paſt this trade has, from a variety of cauſes, been very much upon the decline. Of late, however, it is ſaid, that owing to the good management of the bleacher, the buſineſs has been upon the increaſe. From this ſtatement it appears, that in the year 1787, there were whitened 715 pieces of linen; in 1788—855; in 1789—917; in 1790—1202; in 1791—1232. This cloth does not all belong to the pariſh, but is taken in from different parts of the country. This pariſh contains at preſent 2446 inhabitants. The monaſtery of Old Melroſe was probably founded about the end of the 6th century. This place was a famous nurſery for learned and religious men; and probably continued till the other one at the preſent Melroſe, was founded by king David, which was very large and ſpacious, as appears from the ruins of it yet remaining; one of the moſt magnificent in the kingdom. It was founded by king David, in 1136; dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and endowed with large revenues and many immunities, as appears by the charters granted to the abbot and convent, by the kings of Scotland: 26 miles SW. Berwick, and 25 SSW. Edinburgh.

MEMEL, a town of Pruſſian Lithuania, ſituated on the bay called Curiſch-Haff. It was built in the year 1279, and fortified in 1312; and in the year 1328, it was given up by the governor of Livonia to the great maſter of the Teutonic order, ſettled in Pruſſia. This town on one ſide has the Baltic, and on the other the Curiſch-Haff; beſides theſe, it is alſo watered by the river Dange. The harbour is deep, and has a very good entrance; and within theſe few years, has been improved with two moles, which are carried above fifty rods into the Haffor Bay, and were raiſed at the expence of 11,000 dollars. Memel lies under the guns of the fort, and is well inhabited: it conſiſts of above 400 houſes. Beſides the German town church, here are a Lithuanian and a Calviniſt church. The burghers, who are divided into thoſe of Allſtadt, or the Old Town, and Frederickſtadt, are employed in commerce, brewing, ſoap-boiling, agriculture, fiſhing, &c. Great quantities of flax, lin-ſeed, thread, and hemp, are annually exported from this town. In 1752, ſeventy ſhips arrived in this port and ſixty-nine ſailed from hence to other ports. Memel is fortified with three whole and two half baſtions, with other works, all in the modern way. It was formerly one of the Hanſe towns, and as ſuch, its college of juſtice, in 1254, admitted the Lubeck law. A royal magazine, a ſalt-factory, and a poſt houſe of a conſiderable revenue, are eſtabliſhed in this town. The citadel conſiſts of four baſtions, which are pretty regular, with ravelines, and half moons. The buildings and apartments in this citadel were much improved by the elector Frederick William, and king Frederick I. The moſt remarkable things in it are the two arſenals, the ſuperb houſe of the commandant, the garriſon-church, and the powder magazine. In 1323, 1379 1457, 1540, and 1678, this town ſuffered greatly by fire: 72 miles NNE. Konigſberg. Long. 21. 28. E. Greenwich. Lat. 55. 43. N.

MEMLEBEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia: 3 miles E. Wiche.

MEMMINGEN, an imperial town of Germany, in the circle of Suabia, on the Iller. This town is Lutheran, and its principal church of St. Martin belongs entirely to thoſe of that communion; but the church of our Lady is poſſeſſed by them in common with the Roman Catholics, by virtue of an agreement made in the year 1569. The magiſtracy here, which conſiſts of nineteen perſons, is partly Lutheran and partly patrician, and partly alſo compoſed of the body of the people. It is uncertain whether Memmingen anciently belonged to the Guelphs' county of Altorf or not: it is certain, however, that Guelph VI. frequently reſided at this place. So early as the days of the emperor Frederic I. it was a free imperial town; and on the failure of the Guelph-Altorf family, ſecured itſelf ſo effectually in its imperial freedom, that king Rudolph acknowledged and confirmed it therein by a charter, bearing date 1286. The emperor Charles IV. and Wenceſlaus, alſo engaged to maintain it in its immediate dependency on the empire. Its aſſeſſment in the matricula of the empire, which formerly amounted to 248 florins, was in 1683, reduced to 150. To the chamber at Wetzlar it pays 281 dollars 32 kruitzers, excluſive of a yearly preſent of 15lb. of hellers to the prefecturate of the province, on account of its bailiwick. With Swiſſerland, Italy, and other countries adjacent, it carries on a good trade in Bavarian ſalt, home-ſpun linen, hops, grain, and other goods. In the year 1647, after a vigorous ſiege of nine weeks by the Imperialiſts and Bavarians, it ſurrendered, as incapable of farther reſiſtance: 22 miles SSE. Ulm, and 33 WSW. Augſburg. Long. 27. 50. MENDRAH, a town and diſtrict of Africa, in the country of Fezzan. Though much of its land is a continued level of hard and barren ſoil, the quantity of trona, a ſpecies of foſſil alkali, that floats on the ſurface, or ſettles on the banks of numerous ſmoaking lakes, has given it a higher importance than that of the moſt fertile diſtricts. Of this valuable produce, great quantities are annually brought by the merchants of Fezzan to Tripoli, from whence it is ſhipped for Turkey and Tunis, and the dominions of the emperor of Morocco. The people of the latter employ it as an ingredient in the red dye of the leather, for which they are famous, and in the of the woollen caps that are worn by the Arabs and the Moors, as the baſis of their turbans: 60 miles S. Mourzouk.

MENIN, a town of Flanders, conſiſting of little more than one ſtreet, with one pariſh church, ſituated on the Lis, in the chatellany of Courtray, firſt ſurrounded with walls in the year 1578. In the year 1585, it was nearly deſtroyed by fire. It has often been taken and retaken during former wars. The French made themſelves maſters of it in 1667, and while in their poſſeſſion it was fortified by M. Vauban. After the battle of Ramilies, the army of the allies marched into Flanders, and beſieged this place. The ſiege was conducted by general Saliſch, and the trenches were opened in the night of the 4th of Auguſt, 1706. The marquis de Caraman, who commanded, beat a parley on the 22d, and was conducted, with his garriſon, to Douay; thus Menin, which was by the French conſidered the key of Flanders, fell into the hands of the allies; and by the treaty of Antwerp being made one of the barrier towns, the States-General kept a good garriſon there. In the year 1744, it was again taken by the French, who deſtroyed the fortifications; but was reſtored at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle. During the preſent war, it has been conſidered as a place of conſiderable conſequence, and many attempts have been made mutually to take and to preſerve it: 2 poſts N. Lille, and 4 S. Bruges.

MENTON, a town of Italy, in the principality of Monaco, near the ſea: 2 leagues NE. Monaco.

MENTZ, or Mayence (Archbiſhopric of), an electoral principality of Germany, whoſe territories are extenſive, but conſiderably diſperſed. In the proper archbiſhopric, excluſive of corn, are alſo fine garden fruits, and breeds of cattle, with an abundance of excellent wines, among which, in particular, are to be reckoned the Rheniſh wines, which grow in the Rheingau; ſome good ſalt is likewiſe made; here and there too are iron mines. In the Mentz ſhare of the Berg-Straſze, is found plenty of almonds, cheſtnuts, and filberts. The lower part of the Eichsfeld yields a ſufficient plenty of corn, together with large quantities of flax and tobacco; but the upper part requires the importation of the firſt. The principal rivers which water the electorate of Mentz, are the Rhine, the Mayn, the Jaxt, and the Lahn. In the whole of the electoral countries of Mentz, which lie in this circle, are forty-one cities, and twenty-one boroughs. In the proper archbiſhopric there are no proprietary nobles, but the nobility there belong to the body of the immediate knighthood of the empire. In it are alſo no provincial ſtates, excepting in the Eichsfeld. The countries lying on the Rhine and the Maine, and which ever ſince the reformation have always been in the power of the elector of Mentz, have continued invariably inveſted in the Roman Catholic church. In other countries and places, the electors have introduced the Roman Catholic worſhip throughout them. In many, however, there are ſtill ſome Proteſtant ſubjects, and the Eichsfeld and the territory of Erfurt excepted, Jews are alſo tolerated. In the archbiſhopric are ſome woollen and other manufactures. On the Upper Eichsfeld much ſerge and linen is made, and on the Lower Eichsfeld they apply themſelves with great diligence to the cultivation of tobacco and flax. The inhabitants of this archbiſhopric carry on an important trade in wines. Out of the Berg Straſze too are exported almonds, cheſtnuts, nuts, and nut-tree wood; and the Eichsfelders deal in ſerge, linen, and tobacco. The biſhopric of Mentz was in the eighth century raiſed to an archbiſhopric, which, in the year 751, obtained its full eſtabliſhment, and was firſt adminiſtered by St. Boniface; by degrees it acquired a conſiderable increaſe in its lands. An archbiſhop of Mentz arrives to this dignity by a free choice of the chapter, and muſt ſwear an election capitulation. The papal confirmation is very expenſive. The pallium is alſo dear, and the annalis which each new archbiſhop is obliged to pay to the pope, amount to 10,000 florins. This prelate, however, is the firſt archbiſhop in Germany, and with the archiepiſcopal dignity, that of the elector is inſeparably connected; nay, he is the firſt among all the ſpiritual and ſecular electors. At what time this elector aſſumed to himſelf peculiarly and alone the arch-chancellor's office is uncertain, but this dignity was confirmed to him by the emperor Adolphus, in the year 1292, by the emperor Albrecht I. in the year 1298, and by the emperor Louis IV. in the year 1314. He alſo nominates the vice-chancellor of the empire, and holds at the imperial court a proper chancery. At the aſſemblies of the emperor and ſtates of the empire, the elector of Mentz appears not only every where as the firſt ſtate of the empire, and next after the Roman emperor and king, but alſo wholly regulates all conſultations relating thereto. The imperial matricular evaluation of the elector of Mentz, on account of that electorate, Rieneg and Konigſtein, amounts, each Roman month, to 1927 florins five kruitzers and a half. With reſpect to the ſupreme judicatory of the empire, the elector of Mentz has great prerogatives. At the imperial aulic-council, the vice-chancellor of the empire, who has been already ſaid to be nominated by him, follows immediately after the imperial preſident. He has alſo the nomination of all the ſecretaries. The imperial aulic-chancery too, which is appointed by him, expedites all matters of which cognizance has been taken. He likewiſe collects, and has the direction of the money received for all and ſeveral the diſpatches; keeps the acts, and viſits the imperial aulic-council. The emperor's nomination of a chamber judge is notified to the elector of Mentz, and by him to the chamber-court. The aſſeſſors of the elector of Mentz are poſſeſſed of the firſt place among all of their order. The chancery too of the chamber-court is appointed, regulated, &c. by the elector of Mentz alone. In chamber-terms the elector of Mentz contributes to each term 900 rixdollars twenty-one kruitzers and a half, and has the reputation of due payment. The arch-high chapter of Mentz conſiſts of twenty-four perſons; namely, of five prelates, and nineteen capitulars. The former have the privilege of wearing a mitre, the latter, indeed, need not be prieſts, but, notwithſtanding, are generally ſuch. A capitular is always vicar-general to the archbiſhop in ſpiritual matters. The vacant capitular places are filled up out of the domicelli. Theſe muſt not only be Germans, but alſo be born in the Rheniſh province, and produce ſix noble anceſtors, who are to be confirmed by oath. The archbiſhopric of Mentz, as well as the reſt of the biſhoprics and archbiſhoprics here, is ſubject to the ſee of Rome. The province, belonging to it formerly extended over the greateſt part of Germany, but was by degrees greatly diminiſhed; for, from this province, Moravia, Magdeburgh, Bamberg, Prague, Verden, and Halberſtadt, have withdrawn themſelves. The biſhoprics which are ſtill ſubject to its juriſdiction, are thoſe of Worms, Spire, Straſzburg, Coſtanz, Augſburg, Coire, Wurzburg, Eichſtadt, Paderborn, and Hildeiſheim, as alſo that of Fulda. The electoral revenues are eſtimated at about 1,200,000 florins. The military ſtate here conſiſts of a lifeguard of horſe, and a number of dragoons, together with three regiments of foot, and the like number of provincial regiments, eſtabliſhed on a regular footing, and one of which is ſtationed at the Eichsfeld. The city of Mentz is reckoned a barrier fortreſs of the empire, and the circle of the Upper Rhine conſiders it as one of its fortreſſes, when alſo it frequently keeps therein, under certain reſtrictions, a number of troops, which belong to the circle. At Erfurt is not only a garriſon of the elector of Mentz, but alſo one of the emperor. Mentz is the capital.

MENTZ, a city of Germany, and capital of the archbiſhopric and electorate, ſituated on the Rhine, ſoon after its conflux with the Maine. Mentz is allowed by the whole of the united circles to be a barrier fortreſs of the empire, and though it belongs to the electoral Rheniſh circle, yet the circle of the Upper Rhine conſiders it as one of its circle fortreſſes, and therefore frequently keeps therein, under certain reſtrictions, a number of troops belonging to the circle, which the electoral Rheniſh circle alſo has done. In the year 1735, for the better fortifying of this city, full two Roman months were granted. The city itſelf is large and populous, but conſiſts, for the moſt part, of narrow ſtreets, and old-faſhioned houſes; there are, however, ſome fine buildings, as alſo a conſiderable palace. The electoral palace, called Martinſburg, in the year 1750, received the addition of a new beautiful wing. The cathedral is a lofty vaulted building, which, in the year 1755, was ornamented a-new, and furniſhed with windows. In it is a conſiderable treaſure, and it contains likewiſe ſome good monuments of the archbiſhops and canons. It contains, beſides, 7 pariſh churches, 6 monaſteries, and 5 nunneries, with a charter-houſe, and two other nunneries near the city, as alſo ſix hoſpitals, among which is that of St. Rochus, containing a printing-houſe, together with manufactures of ſtockings and ſtuffs, which are the principal things in it, and a correction-houſe. The univerſity here was founded in the year 1477 or 1482, by the elector Diether. It is matter of diſpute among the learned, whether Mentz was formerly a free imperial city. In the conteſts which aroſe, between the depoſed elector Diether, and his rival Adolphus, the latter made himſelf maſter of the city, in the year 1462, by ſtratagem, and ſubjected it to the archbiſhopric. The emperor, Frederic III. at firſt, indeed, reclaimed it in the name of the empire; but, in the year 1486, the emperor Maximilian I. renounced all right to it, and even extended to it the immunities which had been granted to the countries of Mentz. In the year 1631, the Swedes made themſelves maſters of it, and in 1644 and 1688 alſo the French. In the year 1792, it was taken by the French, under the command of general Cuſtine; the garriſon conſiſted of about 6000 men. Cuſtine ſummoned the governor to ſurrender on the 20th of October, a capitulation was agreed on, and on the 21ſt the garriſon marched out, with the honours of war. In the year following it was retaken, and in the capitulation it was agreed that the troops ſhould not fight againſt the allies for one year. Long. 27. 48. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 59. N.—By an article of the peace, made between the emperor and the French, this city was to be ſurrendered to the latter, and was accordingly taken poſſeſſion of by the troops of the republic, the beginning of the year 1798.

MENZALEH, or Menzala, a large lake of Egypt, running parallel with the Mediterranean, from which it is divided by a narrow ſlip of land, 60 miles in length, and from two to twelve in breadth, overflowed and filled by the waters of the Nile. It was anciently called Tanis, from the town of that name: its waters are ſoft, in the time of inundation, and become brackiſh as the river retreats within its channel. It was the ſame under the reign of the caliphs. The Nile overflowing at the ſummer ſolſtice, the canals which diſcharge themſelves into the lake Tanis make the waters ſoft; and the reflux of the ſea, during winter, renders them ſalt. There are iſlands in the lake, built over like towns, as Nabli, Touna, Samnaa, and Haſſan Elma, which can only be approached by boats. A viſit to theſe iſles, which no modern traveller has examined, and where manuſcripts and antiquities might be found, ſeems an object of importance. About 1200 boats, each annually paying 36 ſhillings to the receiver of the pacha, continually fiſh on the lake.

The ſoil is fertile, and well cultivated, producing wheat, millet, and flax, but it wants wood. It was erected into a biſhopric in the year 968, by Otho the Great, but in the 16th century, the biſhop embracing the Proteſtant religion, the electoral princes of Saxony demanded the adminiſtration of the biſhopric, and the regency of the foundation is annexed to the electoral houſe for ever. In the whole foundation are reckoned ſeven towns, one borough, 212 or 225 villages, and 78 nobles' eſtates. The biſhopric has indeed been charged with an imperial matricular evaluation of ten horſe, and thirty foot, or 240 florins ; but the elector of Saxony exempts it ſine onere. The chapter conſiſts of pure Proteſtant Lutheran perſons, of ancient genuine nobility, and thoſe of ſixteen canons major, among whom are ſix prelates, and four minor canons.

MERSEBURG, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and a capital of a principality of the ſame name, ſituated on the Saale. MERTON, a village of England, in the county of Surry, on the river Wandle; where was once a celebrated abby, anciently famous for the death of Kinulphus, king of the Weſt Saxons, killed here by Kinehard Clito, in the ſmall hut of an inſignificant harlot, of whom he was violently enamoured. Kinehard himſelf was afterwards ſlain by the friends of Kinulph; and thus ſuffered the inſtant puniſhment of his treachery. At preſent this place ſhows only the ruins of a monaſtery, founded by Henry I. at the inſtigation of Gilbert, ſheriff of Surry, and famous for the parliament held at it under Henry III. the day after his coronation, in which were enacted the proviſions of Merton, which are the moſt ancient body of laws, after Magna Charta, and conſiſt of eleven articles. In this aſſembly, upon a motion of the biſhops for eſtabliſhing a conſtitution of the canon law, by which marriage could legitimate iſſue previouſly born, the lay lords made that celebrated anſwer, Nolumus leges Angliæ mutari. Walter de Merton (probably a native of this place) biſhop of Rocheſter, and chancellor of England, had begun his college, on his manor of Maldon, here, in 1274, but ten years afterwards removed it to Oxford, and died about four years after. It is large and tolerably well built, partly near the ſea, and partly on ſome riſing ground. Beſides an irregular fortification, it has a citadel of five large and regular baſtions, and ſeveral eminences, alſo defended by forts. The city has four ſuburbs, one of them inhabited only by fiſhermen. The number of inhabitants is eſtimated at not more than 20,000. Its churches and convents are numerous, and generally elegant, with conſiderable incomes. The archbiſhop's palace is large and well built. The general hoſpital, called, La Loggia, is one of the moſt beautiful public buildings in the city, beſides which there is alſo a large and rich hoſpital, and near it a ſpacious well built lombard-houſe, under good regulations. The harbour is oval, large, and towards the faro, incloſed by a crooked neck of land, on the broadeſt part of which, to the eaſt, ſtands the citadel, but towards its weſt end a fort called St. Salvador, which defends the narrow entrance to the harbour. Near this neck of land is the Lazaretto, built on a rock projecting out of the ſea. The trade of the city has declined very much, yet is ſtill conſiderable, eſpecially ſince the year 1728, when the harbour was declared a free port. An annual fair is held here in Auguſt, at which great quantities of foreign goods are expoſed to ſale. METZ, a town of France, and capital of the department of the Moſelle, ſituated at the conflux of the Seille and Moſelle, and divided into Old and New Town. The Old Town is large, but the ſtreets are narrow. The houſes, however, though old faſhioned are handſome. The New Town is likewiſe large, and of much more beauty than the former. Excluſive of its fortifications, it has three citadels. The biſhop, before the revolution, ſtyled himſelf a prince of the Roman Empire, and was ſuffragan to the archbiſhop of Treves, with a dioceſe of 613 pariſhes, and a revenue of 120,000 livres. Beſides the cathedral, it contained three chapters, 16 pariſh churches, ſix abbies, and a college. In this city are alſo a great number of Jews, who have a ſynagogue here. The Meſzin, or the country round the city of Metz, is of tolerable fertility, and produces a little wheat. It was anciently a part of the kingdom of Auſtraſia, of which Metz was for a long time the capital, and the uſual reſidence of the king. When the children of Charles the Great, and Louis the Pious, divided the dominions of that crown, the kingdom of Lorrain roſe out of the remains of that of Auſtraſia, and towards the end of the ſecond royal line of France, Metz, Toul, and Verdun, three principal towns, ſhook off the yoke, and put themſelves, as free cities, under the protection of the emperor. The power was divided betwixt the biſhop and the magiſtrates; but the latter, with the aſſiſtance of the people, got the ſuperiority over the former, inſomuch that the biſhop had no other power remaining to him in the city of Metz, and country of Meſzin, than a ſhare in the election of the magiſtrates, and in the adminiſtration of the oath of office. In the year 1552, Metz, Verdun, and Toul, put themſelves under the protection of the French, under the name of the protected diſtrict, till the year 1648, when at the peace of Weſtphalia, the three biſhoprics were abſolutely transferred to France. In the year 1556, the biſhop was obliged to cede to the king the right he had in the election of the magiſtrates, and in the adminiſtration of the oath to them: 10 leagues S. Luxemburg, and 38 E. Paris. Long. 23. 50. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 7. N.

MEURS, or Mors, a principality of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, ſurrounded by the duchy of Juliers, Cleves, and Berg, by the archbiſhopric of Cologn, and the duchy of Guelders, being ſomewhat above eight miles in length, and as many broad. It abounds in corn, cattle, and veniſon. To the eaſt its limits are formed by the Rhine, and it is likewiſe watered by ſeveral ſmall rivers and brooks. This country is an ancient fief of Cleves, which the firſt counts of Mors, ſo early as the year 1287, received of the counts thereof. On the death of Hermann, the laſt count of Mors, William duke of Cleves, wanted to take poſſeſſion of the county of Mors, as an open fief; but Walpurgis, ſiſter of the laſt count, made a preſent of, and bequeathed this county to prince Maurice of Naſſau Orange; and though the duke of Cleves, on her death, took poſſeſſion thereof in the year 1600, yet it was wreſted from him by prince Maurice, and it remained neutral in the poſſeſſion of the houſe of Naſſau

Orange, till the death of William III. king of Great Britain, after which the king of Pruſſia, partly as lord, and partly as his heir, ſeized on this county. The principality of Mors has its own peculiar regency, who look to the affairs of the ſovereign, as alſo thoſe relating to fiefs, limits, &c. together with eccleſiaſtical, civil, criminal, fiſcal, and matrimonial matters. From the territories of this principality, the king raiſes yearly about 30,000 rix-dollars. Meurs is the capital.

MEXAO DE ST. LAN, an iſland of Portugal, in the Tagus: 4 leagues above Liſbon.

MEXICO, or New Spain, a country of North America, bounded on the north-weſt by New Mexico, on the eaſt by the Gulf of Mexico, on the ſouth-eaſt by the iſthmus of Darien, and on the ſouth and weſt by the Pacific Ocean; about 550 leagues in length; the breadth is very unequal, in ſome parts 160 leagues, but towards the iſthmus of Darien hardly 20. The greater part being ſituated under the torrid zone, the heat is great, but generally moderated by partial or general rains, or by ſea breezes, which blow alternately. In ſome diſtricts the exhalation of lakes and rivers cool the air, and render it mild and agreeable. From February to April the air is burning during the day, no cloud intercepts the rays of the ſun, lakes and rivers are dried up, and water can hardly be found. In April the rains commence, and continue till September, attended with dreadful thunder and lightning, inundating the low lands. Upon the eaſt coaſts the ſoil is low, marſhy, always inundated in the rainy ſeaſons, and bounded by impenetrable foreſts, the proſpect is gloomy, and the air unhealthy. In the interior parts the air is milder, and more pure, the ſoil fertile, and the country agreeably diverſified; on the weſtern coaſts the ſoil is good, the borders more elevated, and a greater variety is obſerved in the productions. The Spaniards have abandoned the eaſt coaſts; and the malignant air, foreſts almoſt impervious to man, moraſſes and inhoſpitable deſerts, are a better ſecurity than fortreſſes and garriſons of ſoldiers. The mines of gold and ſilver are abundant, of the latter they count above a thouſand; gold is found in the brooks and rivers, as well as in the mines: theſe mines are only found in barren rocks or mountains; ſome of the veins are followed to an aſtoniſhing depth, even to a thouſand feet below the general ſurface of the earth. The perſon who diſcovers a mine has a right to work it, on paying to the king a tenth of its produce. This property includes a circle, whoſe diameter is 800 feet, beyond that another adventurer has a right to ſearch. Theſe are not the only riches produced; here are alſo mines of iron, copper, lead, alum, cryſtal, vitriol, different kinds of precious ſtones, emeralds, turquoiſes, jaſper, porphyry, marble, foſſil ſalt, &c. Mineral ſprings are abundant, and in ſeveral parts volcanos. No country produces a greater abundance of grain, fruits, or legumes; among the foreſt trees are the cedar, brazil-wood, mahogany, and many others unknown in Europe. Among the animals may be reckoned lions, tygers, wild cats, bears, wolves, foxes, deer, goats, ſquirrels, rats, armadillos, hogs, &c. Mexico produces maize, wheat, barley, rice, peas, beans, and other grain; with a great variety of drugs ſince added to the European liſt, ſuch as copal, anime, tacamahac, caranna, liquid amber, balſam of Tolu, guaiacum, mechoacan root, ſarſaparilla, and many more. Other productions are cotton, which employs the manufactures of the country, cochineal, cacao, honey, dying woods, tobacco, ginger, pearls, ſugar, indigo, &c. Innumerable herds of cattle run wild in the ſavannas and woods, whoſe ſkins and fat form an important article of commerce. Sheep are numerous, but the wool is of little value; the lions are grey, and not ſo formidable as thoſe of Africa; the tygers are ſmaller; bears are uncommon. Among the birds may be reckoned thoſe of the domeſtic kind, goldfinches, nightingales, and upwards of twenty ſpecies of ſinging birds, pigeons, parrots, parroquets, eagles, vultures, pelicans, ravens, macaws, &c. &c. Serpents are numerous, as likewiſe ſcorpions, ſpiders, ants, and muſquetos; and at ſome times locuſts, in the ſpace of a night, will deſtroy the harveſt of a diſtrict. In the rivers, in the lakes, and on the coaſts, are found variety of fiſh, and a great number of alligators. The empire of Mexico was at firſt called Anabac, and does not appear to have been very ancient; it was occupied by different tribes, of which the moſt civilized formed themſelves into ſocieties. The Mexicans are ſaid to come from the borders of the Gulf of California, and fixed themſelves near a large lake, in the midſt of which they founded the city of Mexico, which increaſed inſenſibly. For a long time they had no kings, only electing chiefs in time of war, but one of theſe contrived means to make his power continual and hereditary. Montezuma was the ninth in ſucceſſion; theſe princes were deſpotic, fear was the ſupport of their government. The empire was not formed of the provinces which enjoyed the ſame laws; ſome of the provinces were only tributary, enjoying their own laws, others were governed by grandees named by the monarch. Agriculture was imperfect, and conſiſted principally in the cultivation of rice and cacoa, which were the chief food of the people; the rich only indulged themſelves in fowl, fiſh, and game, among which were reckoned ſmall dogs; drunkenneſs was by all ranks held as an odious vice. They went almoſt naked, they painted their bodies, and ornamented their heads with feathers, their noſes and their ears with bone and ſmall works of gold. The king was only diſtinguiſhed from the reſt of the people by a cloke of knit cotton thrown over his right ſhoulder; his palace had no windows, the ordinary houſes were huts, ſome of ſtone, the roofs covered with branches of trees; veſſels of earth, mats, ſome ſeats of palm leaves, were their principal furniture; the arts of luxury were rude, their paintings were without grace, and without deſign; their application to hiſtory did honour to their genius; their wars and their funerals were bloody; their towns were extenſive, but their houſes ſcattered; their moſt beautiful temple was only partly built of ſtone, in which they placed a ſtatue of their divinity, and upon his altars they ſacrificed their victims. Their religion was atrocious and terrible; their divinities inſpired terror, and ſeemed only to breathe vengeance; they were ſurrounded with ſerpents, tygers, and the moſt obnoxious animals. To theſe divinities, it is ſaid, they ſacrificed yearly 2000 human victims. Such, in general, was the ſtate of Mexico when conquered by Cortez, in the year 1519. The country is now governed by a viceroy, who repreſents the king of Spain, and is as abſolute in himſelf, in all things political, military, civil, and criminal; his allowable revenues are 40,000 ducats a year, his ſecret ones amount to a much greater ſum; his employment continues five years. Under him are three tribunals, called audiences, for the adminiſtration of juſtice, theſe audiences take their names from different cities, Mexico, Guadalajara, and Guatimala. The inhabitants of Mexico, conſiſt of native Spaniards, Creoles, who are the deſcendants of Spaniards, Mulattoes, the iſſue of an European and an African ſlave; Metifs, born of an European and an Indian; Meſtizes, the deſcendants of Metiffs; Terceroens, their deſcendants, Quarteroens, after which the fifth generation enjoys all the privileges of Creoles. They reckon in Mexico 500,000 Spaniards, one million of Negroes, Mulattoes and Meſtizes, and two millions of Indians. The audience of Mexico contains the provinces of Mexico Proper, Mechoacan, Guaſteca, Tlaſcala, Guaxaca, Tabaſco, and Yucatan. This is the moſt important of all the Spaniſh poſſeſſions to the north of the line, and ſurpaſſes the other audiences in richneſs and extent.

MEXICO PROPER, a province of North America, which is ſaid to owe its name to an ancient idol, named Mixitli, from whence is formed the word Mexico. It is reported to exceed all the provinces of America in extenſive beautiful vallies, rich arable lands, and delicious paſturage. Fruits are here in the greateſt variety, perfection, and abundance; the great lakes, rivers, and the neighbourhood of the ſea, afford fiſh of every kind. In a word, it enjoys every external and internal advantage, being waſhed, towards the ſouth by the Pacific Ocean, by which means the inhabitants trade with the other maritime provinces, while the richneſs of the country furniſhes every article of commerce, and the reads, lakes, and rivers, every requiſite of domeſtic induſtry and intercourſe. The climate is indeed variable: ſtrangers complain of its exceſſive heat, while the natives frequently ſhiver with cold: however, both, who are bleſſed with ſound conſtitutions, agree, that it is temperate and pleaſant in general. The ſoil is ſo fruitful, that notwithſtanding the great abundance of money, and the external luxury of the Mexicans, the neceſſaries of life are exceedingly reaſonable, a pregnant proof of the plenty that reigns in the provinces. The ſilver mines are much richer than thoſe of Mechoachan, or indeed of any other province of the empire, and their value is ſtill augmented by the ore's containing a conſiderable portion of gold.

MEXICO, a city of America, and capital of the government ſo called, ſituated on a vaſt lake, ſurrounded by high mountains. The ſituation is now, where it always was; the Spaniards not thinking it neceſſary to deſert a city ſo well built and magnificent. In point of regularity it exceeds all the cities in the univerſe, the ſtreets being ſo ſtraight, and exactly diſpoſed, that from any part of the town the whole is viſible. The want of gates, walls, and artillery, together with the five great cauſeways leading to the city, render Mexico extremely remarkable. All the buildings are convenient, but the public edifices are magnificent. It is the ſee of an archbiſhop, and contains 29 churches, and 22 monaſteries and nunneries, of the opulence of which we may form ſome judgment from the revenue of the cathedral, that amounts to nearly 80,000l. a year, out of which the archbiſhop has 15,000l. annually, beſides vaſt ſums that ariſe by way of perquiſites. All the inhabitants are, indeed, immenſely wealthy; and nothing can convey a higher idea of the vaſt grandeur and riches of Mexico, than the prodigious quantities which are daily expoſed to ſale in the ſtreets, of the moſt valuable commodities of Europe and Aſia. The great ſquare in the middle of the town is extremely magnificent, and the palace of the marquis de Valle, as it is called, one of the nobleſt pieces of architecture any where to be met with. It is built in the very ſpot where formerly ſtood the palace of Motezuma, and occupies nearly the ſame ſpace. Several of the hoſpitals are ſuperb; but what moſt ſtrikes the eyes of a traveller, is the vaſt abundance of ſilver, gold, and jewels, expoſed in plate and toys in the ſtreets, by the goldſmiths and ſhopkeepers; and though it has no ſeaport, nor any communication with the ſea by navigable rivers, it enjoys a prodigious commerce, and is itſelf the centre of all that is carried on between America and Europe on one hand, and between America and the Eaſt Indies on the other. The goods from Acapulco to La Vera Cruz, or from La Vera Cruz to Acapulco, for the uſe of the Philippines, and in a great meaſure for the uſe of Peru and Lima, paſs through this city, and employ an incredible number of horſes and mules. Hither all the gold and ſilver is brought to be coined; here the king's fifth is to be depoſited; and all that immenſe quantity of plate wrought which is annually ſent into Europe. Long. 82. 26. W. MEXICO (New). This large region, ſometimes called the kingdom, and ſometimes the province of New Mexico, lies eaſtward of California, being divided by the Gulf from that peninſula. It extends a great way towards the north pole, bounded on that ſide by very high mountains, and a country which is utterly unknown. On the eaſt it has the country of Louiſiania, on the weſt the Californian Lake and Rio Colorado, while on the ſouth it borders on ſome of the provinces of Mexico Proper, or New Spain, but the limits are uncertain. The diviſion of the country is equally uncertain with its limits. Some geographers divide it into fifteen provinces, others into four only: but the bulk of the Spaniſh writers reckon eighteen provinces, concerning which they give us nothing beſides a dry catalogue of the names. A favourable judgment of the excellency of the climate will be formed from its lying within the temperate zone. The ſummers are warm indeed, and the winters pretty ſharp, but then the former are neither ſcorching hot or unwholſome, nor the latter intenſely cold, or deluged with floods of heavy rain; on the contrary, they are repreſented to be clear, healthy, and bracing, neither partaking of the ſtifling moiſture of the Weſt Indies, and ſome parts of South America, nor of the rigorous congealing colds of Canada, and the countries round Hudſon's Bay. The greateſt encomiums are laviſhed on the fertility of the ſoil, the richneſs of the mines, and the variety of the valuable commodities produced in New Mexico, which abounds with fruit and timber, fields and meadows, precious ſtones, ſilver and gold, fine rivers, and the moſt beautiful variety of hill and dale, land and water. All kinds of wild and tame cattle, eſpecially cows and oxen, are found here in the greateſt plenty. The hills are ſtocked with fowls of different kinds, and the rivers abundantly ſtored with the moſt delicious fiſh. Upon the whole, we may eaſily affirm, that New Mexico is among the pleaſanteſt, richeſt, and moſt plentiful countries of America, or any other part of the world. The chief diviſions are New Mexico Proper, New Leon, New Navarre, and California.

MEXICO (Gulf of), a large bay or gulf of the Atlantic, extending north to ſouth, from the coaſt of Florida to the coaſt of Tabaſco and Yucatan, about 600 miles, and eaſt and weſt, from Cuba to the coaſt of Mexico, about 700.

MIDDLEBURG, a ſeaport town of the ſtate of Zealand, ſituated in the centre of the iſland of Walcheren, of which it is the capital. It was at the beginning only a village, which the lords of Borſſele enlarged and ſurrounded with walls, in the year 1132. It is at preſent a large and handſome city, and has the firſt ſeat in the aſſembly of the ſtates of Zealand. The town-houſe is a magnificent building, ornamented with a great number of ſtatues of the comtes and comteſſes of Holland and Zealand ; it was formerly a rich and celebrated abby, founded in the year 1256, by William, king of the Romans, and comte of Holland and Zeeland, who was interred, with the queen Iſabella, in the abby church, with a magnificent monument, erected by Florent V. In this church was held a chapter of the order of the Golden Fleece, in 1505, by Philip the Fair, duke of Burgundy, afterwards king of Spain, when he created ten new knights. It was deſtroyed by lightning in 1712. The revenues of the abby were granted to the biſhop, when pope Paul IV. eſtabliſhed an epiſcopal ſee, at Middleburg, in 1562 ; and the collegiate church of St. Peter was made a cathedral. The dioceſe was under the archbiſhopric of Utrecht, and its juriſdiction extended over ten cities, and about one hundred villages ; and was divided into four deaneries, in which were included nine chapters of canons, one abby, and thirty-three monaſteries. The biſhopric continued but a very ſhort time, for in the year 1574, the city was taken by the Hollanders, after a ſiege of twenty-two months, during which it was bravely defended by Chriſtopher de Montdragon, the Spaniſh general, who, after enduring extreme hardſhips, ſurrendered on the terms, that the ſacred veſſels, church ornaments, eccleſiaſtics, and the garriſon ſhould be ſafely conducted to Flanders ; and that the baron of Ste. Aldegonde, the intimate friend of the prince of Orange, who had been taken priſoner by the Spaniards, ſhould be ſet at liberty, which were faithfully executed by both parties. Since that time the reformed religion has taken place, and the biſhopric been diſſolved. Spain made every poſſible effort to oblige the Hollanders to raiſe the ſiege, and expended vaſt ſums in fitting out divers fleets and armaments to ſuccour the inhabitants, but they were all defeated by the brave Zealanders. The fortifications of Middleburg are very ſtrong and regular, having been much augmented by the Dutch, ſince they became maſters of it. They have eight gates and twelve baſtions to defend the walls and ramparts, with large and deep ditches filled with water ; beſides which its ſituation is ſuch as to enable the inhabitants to lay the country about it under water when they pleaſe. The number of inhabitants is about 26,000. Long. 21, 7. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 34. N.

MIDDELBURG, a town of Dutch Flanders, which was originally only a hamlet to the village of Heyle, and belonged to an abby called Middleburg, from whence it took its name. In the year 1433, the abbot obtained permiſſion to alienate it, after which it paſſed into the poſſeſſion of many different lords, and was, in the year 1617, erected into a comte by archduke Albert in favour of Iſabella de Merode, who brought it as a portion to Philip, comte of Iſſenghein. Though ſituated in the dominion of the Dutch, free exerciſe of the Roman Catholic religion is allowed : 7 miles NE. Bruges, and 4 SE. Sluys.

It is divided into ſix hundreds, and contains two cities, London and Weſtminſter, ſeven market towns, and about 200 pariſhes, without including thoſe in the cities. This county, although one of the ſmalleſt, is the richeſt and moſt populous in the kingdom. The ſoil in general is loamy, in ſome places tending to gravel, in ſome to clay, in others to ſand ; in the neighbourhood of London where manure is eaſily to be obtained, the land is moſtly employed in gardens and nurſeries, or laid down to graſs. At a farther diſtance, eſpecially towards Buckinghamſhire, there are ſome conſiderable tracts of arable land, which produce good crops of corn. There are ſome very extenſive meadows on the ſide of the rivers Thames, Lea, and Coln. The number of cows kept by the London cow-keepers, for the ſupply of the metropolis with milk in the county of Middleſex, is about 7200, beſides 1300 kept on the other ſide of the Thames, in Surry and Kent ; each of theſe cows is ſuppoſed to produce eight quarts of milk a day, on an average. The towns are Barnet, Brentford, Edgeware, Enfield, Hounſlow, Stanes and Uxbridge. Middleſex ſends eight members to the Britiſh parliament, that is, two for the county, four for London, and two for Weſtminſter.

MILAN (Duchy of), a country of Italy, bounded on the north by the Griſons, on the eaſt by the Venetian States, on the ſouth by the ſtates of Piedmont and Parma, and on the weſt by Piedmont and Savoy. Its greateſt breadth from north to ſouth is upwards of 100 miles; and its greateſt length from eaſt to weſt 108. Scarce a country throughout Europe is more fertile, in a variety of excellent productions. Every where it is watered either by rivulets or canals; and after the harveſt of the uſual kinds of grain, the people ſow Turkey wheat, chiefly on account of their poultry. They likewiſe ſow rice, though the culture of both thoſe grains is deemed pernicious to health. The paſtures are very rich, eſpecially in the diſtrict of Lodi, which is famous for the breeding of cattle. The cheeſe made in the country, and improperly called Parmeſan, is well known. Here is alſo excellent wine, and all manner of vegetables and fruits in perfection, together with a very conſiderable number of mulberry-trees, for ſilk. The charms of the country are beſides heightened by three large lakes. The trade of the Milaneſe is conſiderable; but the greater part of the commodities the country affords is conſumed by the inhabitants, their exports generally coming far ſhort of their imports. Great quantities of cloth and linen are manufactured, and ſilk is in great plenty, but not ſo fine as the Piedmonteſe. The ſtuffs are moſtly for home conſumption; but ſilk ſtockings, gloves, and handkerchiefs are uſually exported. Milan is alſo famous for curious works in ſteel, cryſtal, agate, hyacinths, and other gems; and the country every where abounds with ingenious workmen and artificers. From the extraordinary fertility and richneſs of this country, it may be concluded that it produces a conſiderable revenue for its ſovereign. It is ſaid to have brought in to the king of Spain, above two millions of dollars. In the fourteenth century Matthew Viſconti, a nobleman of this country, affected the ſovereignty of it, and was ſupported in his proceedings by the emperor Henry VIII. Towards the end of that century, John Galeatius bought the ducal title from the emperor Wenzel; and his daughter marrying with Louis, duke of Orleans, gave riſe to the pretenſions of the kings of France to this duchy. After the deceaſe of the laſt duke of this line, Francis Sfortia ſo ingratiated himſelf with the Milaneſe, that in 1450, they unanimouſly created him duke. Under his ſucceſſors, France endeavoured to get poſſeſſion of this fine country; but the emperor Charles V. declaring it a fief of the empire, on the death of the laſt duke, inveſted his ſon Philip II. king of Spain, with it; and accordingly it continued annexed to the crown of Spain, till the demiſe of Charles II. In the expenſive and long war about his ſucceſſion, all the Milaneſe being, in 1706, overrun by the imperial troops, the emperor took poſſeſſion of it, as a fief; and it was confirmed to the houſe of Auſtria by the treaty of Baden, in 1714, the quadruple alliance of 1718, and the peace of Aix la Chapelle in 1748; thoſe parts notwithſtanding being excepted, which the houſe of Auſtria ceded to the duke of Savoy. What now remains to the houſe of Auſtria of the duchy of Milan, together with the dukedom of Mantua, is under a general governor, and includes the Milaneſe Proper, the territories of Como, Pavia, Lodi, and Cremona.

MILAN, a city of Italy, and capital of a duchy ſo called. This city is ſaid to be ten miles in circumference; but would not take up, perhaps, half this ſpace, were the many gardens excluded. Its chief defence is a wall and rampart, and at ſome diſtance, a citadel, which conſiſts of ſix baſtions, and is reputed a place of ſtrength. Broad and ſtraight ſtreets are but few, in compariſon of the narrow and crooked; and the many paper windows, or glaſs and paper panes intermixed, even in the fineſt palaces, have a mean appearance. Here are 22 gates, 230 churches, of which 96 are parochial, 90 convents, 100 religious fraternities, 120 ſchools, and about 250,000 inhabitants. The nobility are very numerous, and few places can claim ſuch a freedom of living and acting as one pleaſes. It is the ſee of an archbiſhop. The cathedral, dedicated to St. Maria and Thecla, is more remarkable for its largeneſs than its grandeur; at leaſt this grandeur wants order, the church being a vaſt pile of marble, which, with the ſtatues, alſo of marble, is diſpoſed without taſte or regularity. Its treaſury, of great value, contains, among other precious things, the almoſt invaluable coffin of rock cryſtal, wherein the body of St. Charles Boromeo, cardinal and archbiſhop of Milan, is depoſited. The chief church for antiquity is that of St. Ambroſe, where lie the bodies of that father, and the kings Pepin and Bernard. The Ambroſian college, in the centre of the town, is a foundation of Frederic Boromeo, where ſixteen profeſſors teach gratis. He alſo began to build a fine library, which cardinal Gilbert Boromeo finiſhed, with many large additions. It is ſaid to contain upwards of 40,000 printed volumes, and ſome thouſands of manuſcripts. In this college is alſo an academy of painting, and a muſeum. The ſeminary for ſciences, where the ſtudents are both taught and maintained, and the college of the nobles, are ſtately buildings; but inferior to the Helvetian college, founded for a certain number of Switzers. Here is alſo a mathematical academy. The large lazaret is only made uſe of in time of any reigning contagious diſorder. The great hoſpital is a very fine building, and very liberally endowed by duke Francis Sfortia IV. Its income is ſaid to be between 90 and 100,000 rixdollars. And into it are admitted, not only ſick perſons, but alſo foundlings and lunatics. Here are alſo ſeveral other receptacles for the poor and diſtreſſed. The large hoſpital has ſix ſmaller depending on it. In the Dominican convent, near the church of Madonna della gratia, is held the court of inquiſition. Among the civil buildings is the old and ſpacious regency-houſe, near the cathedral, now the uſual reſidence of the governor-general; alſo the new and ſtately town-houſe, where ſtands an equeſtrian ſtatue of Philip II. This city, which was built by the Gauls, in the 395th year after the foundation of Rome, was ſince beſieged forty times, taken twenty times, and four times almoſt totally demoliſhed; to which may be added, a multiplicity of other misfortunes it had been involved in, out of which it always recovered. Here are manufacturers, artificers, and handicraftſmen of all kinds; beſides ſeveral rivers and many canals, all which are very inſtrumental to promote and increaſe its trade: 132 miles W. Venice, and 65 N. Genoa. Long. 26. 41. E. Ferro. Lat. 45. 25. N.—The inhabitants of this city made no oppoſition to the French republic, but the citadel ſtood a ſiege from the 18th of June, to the 29th, when the garriſon ſurrendered priſoners of war. It is now united with the Ciſalpine republic.

MILO, anciently Melos, an iſland in the Grecian Archipelago. This iſland was long rich and populous, and in early antiquity enjoyed perfect freedom. The Athenians, unable to bring the people of Melos to declare in their favour, in the Peloponneſian war, made a deſcent upon their coaſts, and laid all waſte before them with fire and ſword. Twice did they fail in their enterpriſe, but returning with more numerous forces, they laid ſiege to Melos, and having reduced the beſieged to ſurrender at diſcretion, put to the ſword every man capable of bearing arms. They ſpared only the women and children, whom they carried off into captivity. Lyſander, the Lacedæmonian general, having in his turn ſubdued the Athenians, obliged them to recal the colony they had ſent to Melos, and to reſtore to the iſland the wretched remains of its inhabitants. This iſland loſt its liberty when the Romans, aſpiring to the empire of the world, conquered the whole archipelago. In the partition of that monarchy, it fell to the eaſtern emperors; was afterwards governed by its own dukes, and finally was conquered by Soliman II. Since that period it has groaned beneath Ottoman deſpotiſm, and is completely deprived of its importance. It was, in the memory of man, extremely fertile in corn, wine, and fruits, and contained upwards of 20,000 inhabitants. M. Tournefort, who viſited it in 1700, gives a delightful deſcription of this iſland. The earth, conſtantly heated by ſubterraneous fires, produces almoſt without intermiſſion, wheat, barley, cotton, exquiſite wines, and delicious melons. All the productions of the iſland are of incomparable excellence. Its partridges, quails, kids, and lambs, are in high eſtimation, yet extremely cheap. Could M. Tournefort return to Milo, he would no longer find the beauteous iſle he has deſcribed. He would ſtill ſee the feathered alum, with ſilver threads, ſuſpended from the roofs of caverns, fragments of pure ſulphur filling the crevices of the rocks, numerous mineral ſprings, hot baths, and the ſame fires which, in his time, heated the boſom of the earth, and rendered it ſo fertile. He would now find, on a ſurface of eighteen leagues in circumference, only about 700 inhabitants. He would ſigh to behold the fineſt parts of the country without cultivation, and fertile vallies changed into moraſſes. Milo has aſſumed a very different appearance within the courſe of the laſt fifty years. The plague, every where propagated by the Turks, has cut off the greateſt part of the inhabitants; and the deteſtable government of the Porte, and the oppreſſions of the captain pacha, have completed its deſtruction. Long. 42. 22. E. Ferro. Lat. 36. 38. N.

MINDANAO, one of the Philippine Iſlands, and next to Luçon in point of ſize; of a triangular form, the circumference near 300 leagues, but with ſo many points running out into the ſea, and deep bays, that a man may go acroſs it any where in a day and a half. It lies ſouth-eaſt of Manilla, at the diſtance of 200 leagues. All the country, except upon the ſea-coaſt, is mountainous, yet it abounds in rice, and produces very nouriſhing roots. There are infinite numbers of that ſort of palm-trees, which are called ſago, of the pith of which, reduced to meal, they make bread and biſcuit throughout all the iſland of Mindanao. This iſland likewiſe produces all ſorts of fruits that are to be found in other iſlands of this archipelago; but the cinnamon is a tree peculiar to this of Mindanao, grows on the mountains, without any improvement, and has no owner but him that finds it. Whoever is ſo lucky as to meet firſt with ſuch a valuable tree, begins immediately to make advantage of his good fortune. With this view, he takes off the bark before it is ripe; and ſo, though at firſt it be ſtrong, like that of Ceylon, yet in a ſmall time, and at fartheſt in two years, it loſes all its taſte and virtue. The inhabitants of Mindanao find very good gold by digging deep into the ground, as alſo in the rivers, making trenches before the floods. There is ſulphur enough for all ſorts of uſes, which may be eaſily collected in the ſeveral burning mountains. In 1640, a high mountain broke out into flames, and clouded the air, land, and ſea with its aſhes. In the ſea, between this iſland and that of Xolo, there are very large pearls taken. Long. 141. E. Ferro. Lat. 8. N.

MINDELHEIM, a town of Germany, and capital of a lordſhip, in the circle of Swabia; this lordſhip is about eight miles ſquare, and formerly belonged to the dukes of Teck, being at that time the only remaining part of all their lands. On their extinction, it devolved to the family of Rechberg, and from them to that of Freundſberg, who alſo failing, a conteſt aroſe about it betwixt the families of Fugger and Maxelrain; but the latter transferring their right to duke Maximilian, of Bavaria, in the year 1612, he made himſelf maſter of the lordſhip, and tranſmitted it to his deſcendants. The elector of Bavaria, being put under the ban, in the year 1706, the emperor raiſed this lordſhip into a principality, conferring it as a fief on the moſt illuſtrious duke of Marlborough, who was created a prince of the empire, and inveſted alſo with a ſeat and vote, not only in the bench of princes of the circle of Swabia, but likewiſe in the imperial diet. By the peace of Raſtadt and Baaden, however, in the year 1714, Mindelheim reverted again, under its ancient title of a lordſhip, to the elector of Bavaria. In the matricula of the empire, this lordſhip is aſſeſſed at three horſe, and ten foot, or 76 florins. Its quota to the chamber of Wetzlar, 92 rixdollars 2¾ kruitzers: 22 miles SW. Augſburg, and 26 SE. Ulm. Long. 28. 5. E. Ferro. Lat. 48. 5. N.

MINDEN, a principality of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, bounded on the north by the counties of Diepholz and Hoya, on the eaſt by the county of Schaumburg, on the ſouth by the county of Ravenſberg, and on the weſt by the biſhopric of Oſnabruck. It is about 96 miles in circumference. This principality conſiſts, for the moſt part, of good corn land, and agriculture is carried on here with the greateſt diligence, whence alſo it is enabled to ſupply the neighbouring countries with corn and flax, and in particular with wheat and barley. Its meadows and paſtures are likewiſe good, and its breed of cattle conſiderable. They have alſo, wood, turf, coal, and an important ſalt-work, which ſupplies both the Pruſſian, and the neighbouring countries with that commodity, and plenty of fiſh. In Minden are two mediate, two immediate towns, and one borough, all ſtanding, under the amts, or offices, in which they lie, together with 121 villages and peaſantries, 46 gentleman's eſtates and ſeats, and one commandery. The three provincial ſtates here are the chapter of Minden, the prelates and knights, and the towns and boroughs. In this country alſo, as in other diſtricts of the circle of Weſtphalia, are bondſmen, who, in caſes of diſobedience and contumacy, may be puniſhed by their lords. The Roman Catholics enjoy only in the town of Minden, and the Calviniſts every quarter of a year, at the citadel of Peterſhagen, their public worſhip; but all other churches in the country belong to the Lutherans. This country was a part of Engern. Charlemagne erected a biſhopric at Minden, but the preciſe year of its foundation is not certainly known. In the year 1648, at the peace of Oſnabruck, the hitherto biſhopric of Minden was reſigned, as a principality, to the electoral houſe of Brandenburg, inſtead of the ceded countries of Pomerania. On October 15, 1649, the elector Frederic William cauſed the citadels of this principality to be poſſeſſed by his officers, and on February 12, 1650, received the homage thereof. This principality is rated for a Roman month, at ten horſe and ſixteen foot, or at 122 rixdollars. Towards the maintenance of the chamber-court, it is taxed to each term fifty-four rixdollars, twelve kruitzers. Minden is the capital.

MINDEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and capital of a principality of the ſame name, ſituated on the Weſer, and formerly one of the Hanſe towns. It is environed with ramparts and ditches, and about two miles in compaſs. The ſituation for navigation and trade is commodious, and ſome of the inhabitants carry on a conſiderable brewery; while others are employed in agriculture and breeding of cattle. The cathedral here is a conſiderable building, and near it is a noble chapter-houſe, conſiſting of eighteen perſons, who are partly Roman Catholic, and partly Lutheran. This town was a place of conſideration ſo early as the time of Charlemagne. In the year 1026 the emperor Conrad II. held here a diet of the empire, at which his ſon, Henry III. was elected king of the Romans. In 1547, it was beſieged by the Imperialiſts, but made up matters with the emperor, by a ſtipulation, paying down to him 6000 rixdollars. In the year 1625, it was ſurpriſed by a garriſon of Imperialiſts, which, for two years only, ſtood the town in at leaſt 600,000 rixdollars, and which, to this day, has entailed a great load of debts. In 1634, it was beſieged and taken by the Swedes, after it had been occupied for nine years and twelve weeks by the Imperialiſts. The Swedes did not quit it till September 7, 1650. In the year 1759, a battle was fought on a heath near this town, between the allies, under the command of prince Ferdinand of Brunſwick, and the French, under the command of M. de Contades, in which the latter were defeated, with the loſs of 7000 men killed, wounded, and priſoners. The loſs of the allies was about 2000: 30 miles E. Oſnabruck. Long. 26. 14. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 22. N.

MINDORO, one of the Philippine Iſlands, ſituated about nine leagues ſouth from the iſland of Luçon; of a triangular form, and about fifty leagues in circumference. The iſland is high and mountainous, abounding in cocoa and other fruit-trees, with ſome rice. Long. 137. 15. E. Ferro. Lat. 13. N.

MINEHEAD, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Somerſet, ſituated on the north coaſt of the county of Devon, in the Briſtol Channel. It is a borough town, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament; and has a weekly market on Wedneſday. It was a conſiderable place of trade, both for the great quantities of wool and linens it imported from Ireland, as for the conſiderable manufactures carried on in the woollen branch at home, but it is now gone much to decay; there being only a few veſſels employed in the coal-trade, and a ſmall herring fiſhery. This port is the beſt ſituated of any in the Briſtol Channel, being a ſafe and commodious harbour, and of the moſt eaſy acceſs; it was but little frequented otherwiſe till lately; but on account of the pleaſantneſs of the ſituation, and ſalubrity of the air, a number of perſons have been induced to viſit it as a bathing-place in the ſummer ſeaſon. This borough was incorporated by queen Elizabeth, with great privileges, on condition the corporation ſhould keep the quay in repair; but its trade falling off, the quay was neglected, and they loſt their privileges. A ſtatute was obtained in the reign of king William, for recovering the port and keeping it in repair, by which they were to have the profits of the quay and pier for thirty-ſix years, which have been computed at about 200l. a year: and they were at the expence of new building the quay. In purſuance of another act, confirming the former, a new head has been built to the quay, the beach cleared, &c. ſo that the largeſt ſhip may enter, and ride ſafe in the harbour. The town contains about 500 houſes, and 2000 ſouls. It was ſome years ſince nearly deſtroyed by fire: 24 miles WNW. Bridgewater, and 161 W. London. Long. 3. 34. W. Greenwich. Lat. 51. 12. N.

MINEHEAD, a cape of Ireland, on the ſouth weſt coaſt of the county of Waterford: 4 miles SSW. Helwick Head.

MINGRELIA, a country of Aſia, bounded on the north by Circaſſia, on the eaſt and ſouth-eaſt by Imeretta, on the ſouth by Trebiſond, and on the weſt by the Black Sea. The country is covered with foreſts of wood, with a ſmall proportion of arable land. Rain is frequent, which renders the air unwholeſome, eſpecially to ſtrangers, neither do the natives often live longer than ſixty years. Vines are numerous, which produce excellent wine. The paſtures are excellent, and feed a great number of horſes. The inhabitants are handſome, eſpecially the women; but are, in general, thieves, perfidious, cruel, drunken, and immodeſt. They think it an act of charity to put to death the new born infants, when they are unable to ſupport them, and ſuch as are ſick, when they have no hopes of their recovery. Their general occupation is the chaſe, and their greateſt happineſs conſiſts in the poſſeſſion of a horſe, a good dog, and a well-trained falcon. The peaſants are ſlaves to the nobility: their religion is ſaid to be that of the Greek church. The principality is hereditary; the prince takes the title of Dadian, or the chief of juſtice. The tribute exacted by the Turks is a quantity of linen cloth, made in the country. Their principal commerce is in ſlaves.

MING-TSING, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Fo-kien: 25 miles NW. Fou-tcheou.

MINORCA, an iſland in the Mediterranean, one of thoſe anciently called Baleares; about 30 miles in length, and about 10 in breadth, ſituated about 8 leagues NE. from Majorca. The ſouth ſhore of this iſland is ſmooth, but, towards the north, very rugged, which is occaſioned by the violent blaſts from that quarter. The ſea has ſo withdrawn from this iſland, that near the harbour are ſeveral new flats, which are turned into garden-grounds. The air is moiſt; the heat in a Fahrenheit thermometer, placed in the ſun, riſes to 102, and, conſequently, is not very intenſe. The quickſilver, too, is ſeldom known to ſink under 41, which is ſhort of the freezing point. The ſoil cannot be extolled for its fertility. The water, alſo, is hard, whence nephretic diſorders are common here. Here is great plenty of fiſh, particularly of wilks, which are of great ſervice to the commonalty in lent. One of the moſt profitable commodities of the country is ſalt, which the ſun prepares in cavities betwixt the rocks. Here are lead-mines, but no flints; likewiſe a vaſt variety of petrified ſhells, and fine marble. Some of its wine is excellent; and the inhabitants, when they had the Engliſh for cuſtomers, were ſaid to make 27,000l. ſterling, a year of it. They have alſo a certain kind of cheeſe, of which they are extremely fond. Rabbits are in great plenty; there are plantations of olives, cotton, and capers. The palm-trees here bear no fruit. The opuntia is very common, and plentifully eaten, as are alſo the acorns. The myrtles are of great advantage to tanners. Their chief neceſſaries however, ſuch as corn, beef, brandy, tobacco, linen, ſtuffs, books, &c. they are ſupplied with from abroad; and theſe, collectively, ſtand them yearly in not leſs than 71,200l. ſterling. They live moſtly on vegetables, love dancing, and have ſuch a turn for poetry, that the very peaſants challenge each other to trials of genius that way. They are alſo very dextrous with their ſlings, and command their cattle with them; however, they want induſtry, whence they neglect many profitable occupations in farming and trade. The houſes on the iſland are computed at 3089, and the inhabitants at 27,000. The Engliſh took it from the Spaniards, in the year 1708, and kept it till 1756, when, after a very brave reſiſtance, under general Blakeney, they ſurrendered it to the French, who had inveſted Fort St. Philip, with an army of 25,000 men, well provided with all military ſtores. The iſland is divided into four quarters. Cittadella is the capital.

MITTAW, the capital of the duchy of Courland, the reſidence of the duke, and the regency of the country. It is ſituated on the river Aa, in that part of Courland called Semigallia. It is an extenſive town, but within its circuit contains a great many gardens and open places or areas. The houſes, for the moſt parts, have no particular elegance to attract the eye; and the walls and moats of the town are decayed. However, it is pretty well inhabited. Here are two Lutheran churches, a beautiful Calviniſtical church, completed in the year 1740, and a Popiſh church. This city is alſo the ſeat of the regency, and ſuperintendants of both duchies. The town ſchool, though it is the principal in the whole country, is at preſent far from being in a flouriſhing condition. The palace built by the late duke, is a great pile of buildings, containing a large and handſome ſuite of apartments, but almoſt totally without furniture. It is ſo magnificent, and upon ſo large a ſcale, for ſo little a ſovereignty, as almoſt to juſtify the witticiſm of a traveller, who affirmed that the palace was larger than the dukedom, eſtimating the country not from its ſize, but from its trivial conſequence in the ſcale of the north. The academy, inſtituted by the preſent duke at a conſiderable expence, contained, in May, 1785, almoſt as many profeſſors as ſtudents, there being eight profeſſors, and only 20 ſtudents: 140 miles N. Konigſberg, and 56 W. Riga.

MOCHE, a town of South America, in the Audience of Lima, and juriſdiction of Santa.

MOCHA, or Mochha, a town of Arabia, in the province of Yemen. This city ſtands in a very dry and barren ſituation. Its fortifications are the walls which ſurround it, ſome towers on the way to Muſa, which are dignified with the name of caſtles, and two other caſtles of the ſame ſort, upon the two arms of the harbour. The greateſt of theſe two caſtles is called Kalla Tejar, and the ſmalleſt Kalla Abdurrab, from the names of two ſaints, buried in theſe two places. They are provided with ſome few pieces of cannon. The houſes in the city are built of ſtone, and ſome are handſome. However, there are others, both within and without the walls, no better than the huts common through all the Tehama. In the environs of this city are abundance of date-trees, and many agreeable gardens. Mocha is not an ancient city. It was built about four centuries ſince. It, like many other cities in the Tehama, owes its origin to a ſaint, the celebrated Schech Schœdeli. Mocha was the laſt city in Yemen, of which the Turks retained poſſeſſion. It is ſaid that the Arabs did not conquer, but buy it. Since the Turks were diſpoſſeſſed, it has never had another maſter than the imam. A dola having enriched himſelf in his government, had fortified the city, and drawn a trench round it, which is now filled up. He was ſuſpected of an intention to make himſelf independent, but his views were fruſtrated, and himſelf caſt into priſon. From that time a dola has never been continued above three years in this lucrative government. A good many Jews live here, in a ſeparate village, as in the other cities of Yemen. Here are nearly 700 Banians, Rajapots, and other Indians, ſome of whom are merchants, and others earn their livelihood by exerciſing different mechanic arts. When they have made a ſmall fortune, they commonly return home to India; and on this account are always looked upon as ſtrangers. In the year 1738, Mocha was bombarded by the French, to recover a debt from the imam of 82,000 crowns. Several nations formerly traded to this port, which now frequent it no more. The Portugueſe, who were, two centuries ago, very powerful on the Arabic Gulf, have long ſince ceaſed to ſend ſhips thither. The Dutch rarely appear here; and the French never in time of war, although they ſtill continue to rent warehouſes here. The Engliſh at preſent engroſs, almoſt excluſively, the trade of this place. The Arabs have ſcarcely any article for exportation, except coffee, of which the Indians are not very fond. The Engliſh ſhips muſt return empty to India, if they did not gain conſiderably by carrying money, with which the Arabian merchants entruſt them. There is a great quantity of iron ſold in Arabia, which the Engliſh purchaſe chiefly from the Danes. Long. 43. 23. E. Greenwich. Lat. 13. 19. N.

MODANE, a town of Savoy, in the county of Maurienne; near which are ſome mines of iron and copper: 15 miles E. St. Jean de Morienne.

MODBURY, a town of England, in the county of Devon, with a weekly market on Thurſday. It is ſaid to have once ſent members to parliament in the reign of Edward I.: 14 miles E. Plymouth, and 208 WSW. London.

MODENA (Duchy of), a principality of Italy, bounded on the north by the duchy of Mantua; on the eaſt by the Bologneſe, on the ſouth by the republic of Lucca; and on the weſt by the duchy of Parma, and ſome part of Tuſcany, about 60 miles in its greateſt length, and from 20 to 36 in breadth. It abounds in corn, excellent wine, and other productions. In ſome parts, particularly near St. Polo, not far from Reggio, is found an excellent alcaline earth, ſometimes as a powder, yet more frequently as a moiſt oleaginous tophus, which being reduced to powder, is bright, ſmooth, white, and quite inſipid. It is uſed as a remedy againſt poiſon, fevers, dyſenteries and other diſorders. In a mountain called Caſtello di monte Baronzone, and elſewhere, wells are dug, to the depth of forty or ſixty feet, and on the water a reddiſh petroleum is ſeen to float, which abounds moſt in autumn and ſpring. Theſe wells are incloſed, and every fortnight the oil is ſkimmed off the ſurface. On the drying up of one of theſe wells, it is either digged down much deeper, or a new one is made, this oil is uſed for embalming, varniſhing, painting, and as an ingredient in ſome medicinal preparations. Amber is dug out of a ſoil impregnated with petroleum. Two Italian miles from Saſſuolo, is an aperture in the earth called La Salſa, which frequently, but moſt commonly in ſpring and autumn, emits ſmoke, flame, aſhes, and ſtones of a ſtrong ſulphureous ſmell, and ſometimes to the height of 60 or 80 feet. Theſe eruptions are often attended with very loud noiſe: the hill alſo which contains the hiatus is quite barren, and when the ejaculation is ſtrong and briſk, the petroleous wells are obſerved to become very turbid. Some parts of the country afford ſeveral kinds of petrefactions. The chief rivers here are the Croſtolo, the Secchia and the Panaro. The preſent ducal houſe of Eſte had for the founder a perſon of the name of Azo, who was by deſcent a Saxon, and count or marquis of Eſte, which ſmall city lies in the diſtrict of Padua. Among his deſcendants was Obiſſo III. marquis of Eſte and Ferrara, who again united the city of Modena to his houſe. His grandſon, Nicholas III. acquired Reggio, Forli, and other places in Romandiola. His ſon, Borſus, in 1452, was, by the emperor Frederic III. created duke of Modena and Reggio, and count of Rovigo, and in 1470, pope Paul II. conferred on him the title of duke of Ferrara. Of the ſons of duke Alphonſus I. the moſt remarkable were Alphonſus, Hercules II. fourth duke of Ferrara and Modena; and Alphonſus I. marquis of Eſte, who was his natural ſon by a woman of mean birth, but afterwards his third wife. Hercules II. ſon of Alphonſus II. and fifth duke of Ferrara and Modena, dying without iſſue, the emperor Radolphus II. inveſted Cæſar, ſon of Alphonſus I. with Modena, Reggio, and Carpi, as fiefs; but the duchy of Ferrara being claimed by pope Clement VIII. it was accordingly aſſumed as a fief of the eccleſiaſtical ſtate. Duke Francis I. Cæſar's grandſon, received afterwards Corregio, as a fief, from the emperor Ferdinand II. His grandſon, Francis II. dying without heirs, his ſon, Rinaldo, whom he had by his third wife, reſigned his cardinal's hat, and ſucceeded his brother's ſon in the government. In 1710, he purchaſed the duchy of Mirandola, and was inveſted with it by the emperor. His ſon and ſucceſſor, Francis Maria, ſiding with Spain in the laſt wars, after the death of Charles VI. loſt his dominions. But at the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle was re-inſtated, purſuant to the ſame manner he had poſſeſſed them before the war. The eſtates of the duke conſiſt of the duchy of Modena Proper, the duchies of Reggio and Mirandola, and the principalities of Corregio, Carpi, and Novellara, with a few other eſtates.

MODENA, a city of Italy, and capital of the duchy of the ſame name, and uſual reſidence of the duke. It is a pretty large and populous city, but the ſtreets are narrow, and the houſes without beauty or ſymmetry. Throughout all parts it has piazzas, but the walks are both low and dark. The churches alſo have little or nothing worth notice. It is the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of the archbiſhop of Bologna. In a chamber under the cathedral tower, the Secchia rapita, ſo much talked of in travels, is ſeen hung up by an iron chain. This Secchia rapita is nothing more than a well-bucket, with iron-hoops, which was taken in a petty war, from the inhabitants of Bologna, at one of their doors, and is here preſerved as a monument of courage and victory. In the college founded by St. Borromeo, ſeventy or eighty young noblemen are maintained and inſtructed. The ducal palace is large and ſplendid. The picture gallery, including the lobby, conſiſts of ſix rooms, all filled with ſelect pieces of the moſt famous maſters. The moſt admired is Corregio's night-piece, repreſenting the birth of Chriſt, with the Virgin Mary and the Shepherds. The city is fortified, and on its ſouth ſide ſtands the citadel. The houſe of Eſte has been in poſſeſſion of the city ever ſince the year 1288: 80 miles SW. Venice, and 30 S. Mantua. Long. 28. 31. E. Ferro. Lat. 44. 39. N.—On the approach of the French army towards this city, the duke retired from his dominions, with a large ſum of money, to Venice. An armiſtice was, however, entered into, and the duke agreed to pay to the republic 7,500,000 livres in caſh, 2,500,000 in proviſions and military ſtores, with ſome pictures and other ſacrifices. It now forms a part of the Ciſpadane republic.

MOGADOR, or Mogodor, a ſea-port town of Africa, in the empire of Morocco. This place, which the Moors call, indifferently, Suera, or Mogodor, receives its name from a ſaint, held here in great veneration, by the name of Sidi Mogodoor, whoſe tomb is to be ſeen at a ſmall diſtance to the ſouth of the town. Mogador formerly had a wretched caſtle, built by the Portugueſe, to preſerve a communication with their ſettlements, to the ſouth of this coaſt. This caſtle alſo protected the entrance of a harbour, formed by a channel between the main land and a ſmall iſland. Such a ſituation appearing favourable to make it a place of trade, the preſent emperor reſolved to found a city here, and the wealthier Moors began to build houſes, to pleaſe their ſovereign. Foreign merchants were invited to do the ſame; and, to induce them, large abatements were offered in the cuſtom duties. Theſe promiſes, however, though ſolemnly made, were not ſo ſcrupulouſly obſerved. This city, which was began in 1760, is now completely finiſhed: it contains a great number of houſes, handſomely and ſolidly built. The ſtreets are all ſtraight lines, and there is no town in the empire in which we ſee ſuch a regularity of plan. It is ſurrounded with walls, and batteries are erected, not only on the ſea ſide, but toward the land, to defend it from any incurſion of the ſouthern Moors. This town ſtands on marſhy ground, and ſo low, that, at ſpring tides, it is almoſt ſurrounded by the ſea. The country about it is a melancholy deſert of accumulated ſand. The port of Mogodor is formed by a channel, between the main land and an iſland, more than a mile in length. It is ſufficiently large for ſhips of a middling ſize, but in general it has not ſufficient depth, which diſadvantage is increaſed every day by the accumulation of the ſand: 30 leagues SSW. Morocco. Long. 7. 48. E. Ferro. Lat. 31. 30. N.

MOGANOOR, a town of Hindooſtan, in the Myſore country: 11 miles S. Namoul.

MOGHOSTAN, the ſouthern part of the province of Kerman, in Perſia, ſo called.

MOGILEV, a town of Ruſſia, and capital of a government, on the river Daieper. It is a handſome commercial town, where the Ruſſians carry on a conſiderable trade. Prince Uladiſlaus, ſon to Sigiſmund IV. in 1616, drew together an army of Poles in this town, and penetrated into Ruſſia. In the year 1654, Mogilev was taken by the Ruſſians; and though the Poles ſat before it in 1660, they were obliged to raiſe the ſiege and retire. However, it was taken from the Ruſſians, in the year 1662, by the inhabitants, who ſent off part of the garriſon by ſtratagem, and made the reſt priſoners of war. By the diviſion of Poland, in the year 1773, it was ceded to Ruſſia, with its territory, and erected into an archbiſhopric of the Roman church, with an aſſiſtant biſhop: 340 miles ENE. Warſaw, and 364 S. Peterſburg. Long. 48. E. Ferro. Lat. 53. 53. N.

MOLA, or Mola di Gaeta, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Lavora, ſituated near the ſea. Here is a cuſtom-houſe, and the garriſon is relieved every week from Gaeta. According to ſome, Cicero was aſſaſſinated at this place, and the unfortunate German princes, Conradine and Frederick, taken priſoners; though others, on the contrary, affirm, that theſe particulars happened at another place. Here, anciently, ſtood the city of Formia, deſtroyed by the Saracens, of which the rudera are ſtill ſeen. The great numbers of large orange trees in the open fields between this place and Gaeta, make the road very pleaſant: 8 miles SE. Fundi, and 3 NE. Gaeta.

MOLDAVA, a river of European Turkey, which riſes on the borders of Hungary, in Buccovina, paſſes by Niemecz, &c. and runs into the Siret, near Roman, in Moldavia.

MOLDAVIA, a province of European Turkey; bounded on the north and north-eaſt by Poland, from which it is ſeparated by the Dneiſter, on the eaſt by Beſſarabia, on the ſouth by Walachia, and on the weſt by Tranſilvania: about 180 miles in its greateſt length, from north to ſouth; and ſomething leſs in breadth from eaſt to weſt. The river Pruth croſſes it from north to ſouth. The country has ſome very fertile lands, but a conſiderable part of the eaſtern diviſion lies uncultivated, conſiſting chiefly of deſerts; and the weſtern is very mountainous. Its principal rivers are the Pruth and the Sereth. The inhabitants are of Walachian extraction, and profeſs the Greek church; but many of them are alſo Mahometans, Ruſſians, Poles, Raſcians, and Armenians. Towards the cloſe of the twelfth century, a Walachian colony came from Tranſilvania, and ſettled in this country. Their leader, named Bogdan, eſtabliſhed their civil and eccleſiaſtical government; and, for the ſupport of the latter, obtained an archbiſhop and other eccleſiaſtics from the patriarch of Conſtantinople. He was the firſt prince of Moldavia, and laid the foundation of the principal towns, for which reaſon the country was originally called, from him, Bogdania. The increaſe of the power of the king of Hungary, was a misfortune to this country; the inhabitants after ſevere ſtruggles being made tributary to that monarch, in the 14th century. In the year 1280, the Turks firſt made an attempt upon Moldavia. This country ha sa prince, or waywode, of its own, who is alſo ſtyled hoſpodar, and is a vaſſal of the Ottoman Porte, to which he is obliged to pay an annual tribute. Moldavia is divided into Upper and Lower. Upper Moldavia reaches almoſt to Jaſſy, being bounded towards the eaſt by the river Dneiſter, to the north partly by that ſtream, and partly by Poland, and weſtward by Tranſilvania. Lower Moldavia borders, to the weſt, upon the mountains of Tranſilvania; its ſouthern boundary is the Danube; to the ſouth-eaſt it is bounded by Beſſarabia, and to the eaſt by the Dneiſter. Jaſſy is the capital.

MOLE, a river of England, which riſes on the borders of Suſſex, and croſſing the county of Surry, from ſouth to north, runs into the Thames, oppoſite Hampton Court. This river is ſaid to hide itſelf under ground, in its courſe; but according to the judicious continuator of Cambden, in reality the ſwallows (as they are more truly called, not in the ſingular number ſwallow) a tract of ſoft low ground, for near two miles, in very dry ſeaſons, abſorb the waſte water in caverns, on the ſides of the banks, but not ſo as to prevent a conſtant ſtream from taking its courſe, in an open channel above ground, winding round in the vallies from Dorking to Letherhead, except in a very dry ſummer, though not of that breadth and current, as when it croſſes the road at Mickleham, beyond which, at Burford bridge, its channel is ſometimes dry in ſuch ſeaſons. In deeds of the time of Henry VIII. it is called Emley river, and gives name to the hundred.

MOLE ST. NICHOLAS, ſee Cape St. Nicholas.

MOLEDIN, a river of Germany, in the duchy of Carinthia, which runs into the Geil, near Mauten.

MOLUCCA ISLANDS, iſlands in the Eaſtern Indian Sea. Theſe valuable iſlands, ſtrictly ſpeaking, conſiſt of no more than five: viz. Ternate, Timor or Motir, Tydor, Machian, and Bachian; but Amboyna, Bourſo, Ceram, and ſeveral others, are now included in the name of Moluccas. The five former are not out of ſight of each other, and lie all of them within the compaſs of twenty-five leagues. They are famous for producing ſeveral ſorts of valuable ſpices, but eſpecially nutmegs and cloves, and are under the dominion of three kings. Their coaſts are rendered very dangerous by ſands and ſhelves. They were formerly ſubject to the Chineſe, fell next under the Javaneſe, were, in proceſs of time, ſubdued by the Malayans; and the Mahometans had begun to ſettle in them, and convert the inhabitants to their religion, but a very little while, before they were diſcovered by the Portugueſe. Their chief riches conſiſt in cloves: they have extraordinary parrots, which exceed in beauty thoſe of the Weſt Indies: and many birds of paradiſe. They have alſo almonds, and coarſe tobacco. During their wars with the Portugueſe, they burnt all their clove-trees, retired to the mountains and deſerts, and forbad selling any thing to that nation, on pain of death: a prohibition which reduced them to great extremity. Though they burnt the cloves out of deſpair, their aſhes ſo enriched the ſoil, that it produced cloves in greater abundance than ever, in a few years. Many of theſe iſlands had their particular kings, but all ſubject to the king of Ternate; and they ſerved under him to revenge the death of King Aerio, who was treacherouſly murdered by the Portugueſe. This great king's name was Cachil Babu, Aerio's third ſon. He allowed the Dutch to trade here; in 1599 entered into a ſtrict friendſhip with them, and they aſſiſted him to ſhake off the yoke of the Spaniards and Portugueſe.

MOMAPANE, a lake of Canada: 56 leagues N. Quebec.

Mombaça, or Mombaſo, a kingdom of Africa, near the coaſt of the Indian Sea, ſituated to the ſouth of Melinda; the extent toward the ſouth and weſt is not well known. The ſoil is exceedingly fruitful, and produces rice, millet, and other grain, variety of fruit-trees, and other vegetables and eſculents: here are alſo bred vaſt quantities of cattle, and variety of poultry: and the country abounds with excellent ſprings of freſh water. The climate is temperate, the air healthy. The capital was on a peninſula; but hath been ſince turned into an iſland, by cutting a canal through the iſthmus, in ſuch a manner, that one part of it covers the city, ſo that it is not ſeen, till we enter the port. The houſes are built of ſtone, cemented with mortar, and embelliſhed with curious paintings, and other ornaments: the ſtreets ſtraight, though narrow: and the houſes contiguous and terraced on the tops. The city is defended by a ſtrong citadel, into which the Portugueſe afterwards retired, when they could hold the town no longer: they were afterwards driven out of this laſt retreat, in the year 1631, by an Arabian ſheyk, who made it the place of his reſidence, where the inhabitants of Mombaſo, as well as other trading merchants, applied to him for the liberty of commerce. Before the town, is formed by the ſea, a commodious bay, which opens in the form of a cockle-ſhell, into which the trading veſſels have ſufficient depth of water, and room to ſail and tack about, the channel being wide enough for the largeſt of them to enter with all their ſails diſplayed. This port carries on a great commerce with the iſlands and kingdoms adjacent. Here is great variety of inhabitants, ſome black, ſome white, olive, and ſwarthy; but moſt of them dreſs after the Arabian manner, the richer ſort very ſumptuouſly. The people are ſaid to be more affable and civil to ſtrangers than any on this coaſt, though conſiſting of ſo many nations, complexions, and religions, as Mahometans, Idolaters, and Chriſtians. The Portugueſe made a number of converts upon their ſettling in this kingdom. The far greater part afterwards either returned to their old Paganiſm, or turned Mahometans. Long. 58. 28. E. Ferro. Lat. 3. 45. S.

MONA, ſee Moen.

MONACO, a ſmall principality of Italy, ſituated on the coaſt of the Mediterranean, between the county of Nice, and the Genoeſe territories. It is only four or five Italian miles in circuit. The princes of Monaco had continued for 200 years under the protection of Spain; but prince Honoratus II. on ſome diſguſt, throwing himſelf, in 1641, into the arms of France, received a French garriſon into Monaco. By this ſtep, he loſt ſome fiefs in the Spaniſh dominions, to the amount of 25,000 ſcudi per annum; but the king of France, in return, gave him the duchy of Valentinois, and the barony of Buis, in Dauphiné, the marquiſate de Beaux, and the lordſhip of St. Remi, in Provence, the barony of Calvinet, in Auvergne, and the county of Cardalez, in the government of Lyons, and likewiſe created him a duke and peer of France. The chief line of the Grimaldi, which had ruled this principality 800 years ſucceſſively, failed in 1731, in the perſon of Antony Grimaldi, whoſe eldeſt daughter, in 1715, being declared heireſs of the principality of Monaco, and its dependencies, was married to Francis Leonorus, count de Torrigny, ſon to the marquis de Matignon, marſhal of France; who afterwards took on him the title of duke of Valentinois. The fruit of this marriage was Honoratus Camillus Leonorus, who adopted the name and arms of Grimaldi. —This territory is now united to France.

MONACO, a city of Italy, and capital of the duchy to which it gives name, and reſidence of the duke, which ſtands on a rock, near the ſea. It is ſmall, and the ſtreets narrow; but, beſides its fortifications, it has a garriſon, with a good harbour, and can compel all ſhips paſſing by, to put in, and pay toll: 2 leagues NE. Nice. Long. 25. 8. E. Ferro. Lat. 43. 43. N.

MONAGHAN, a county of Ireland, in the province of Ulſter: 30 miles in length, from north to ſouth, and from 11 to 20 in breadth, from eaſt to weſt. It contains nineteen pariſhes, and about 21,523 houſes, and 118,000 ſouls. The ſoil is, in general, deep and fertile, in ſome places damp and wet; ſome places are hilly, but hardly can be called mountainous, except Sliebh-Baught, on the borders of Tyrone. The linen manufacture flouriſhes, eſpecially in the north and weſt parts of the county: Two members are returned for the county, and two for the town of Monaghan.

MONDOVI, a town of Italy, and capital of a diſtrict or ſmall province in the principality of Piedmont, to which it gives name; it is ſituated at the foot of the Appenines, on a mountain, near the river Elero: the upper part of the mountain began to be inhabited in the year 1038; the date of the foundation of the city is marked on a ſtone in the cathedral 1031. The troubles of Italy increaſed the number of inhabitants; among the reſt came many of the citizens of Milan, when Frederic Barbaroſſa deſtroyed that place. Theſe new colonies obliged them to enlarge their town, and the walls encloſed the whole of the mountain, the veſtiges of which are yet viſible. They were ruined during the wars of the 16th century, partly by the French, and partly by the Imperialiſts. Nevertheleſs, in the year 1573, Emanuel Philibert, duke of Savoy, built a citadel, to defend the place. Mondovi was at firſt a republic, till the diſſenſions among the inhabitants compelled them to ſeek a maſter. In the year 1347, they ſurrendered themſelves to the princes of Savoy, and ſucceſſively to divers other princes, till the death of Robert king of Naples, whoſe heireſs, Jane, reſtored them to their liberty, which they enjoyed not long; for freſh diſſenſions broke out, and, in 1396, they came under the power of Amadeus of Savoy, prince of Achaia, on certain conditions, partly favourable, and partly compulſory: from him it deſcended to the king of Sardinia, as duke of Savoy. It was erected into a biſhopric by pope Urban VI. in the year 1388, under the archbiſhop of Turin. Beſides the cathedral, it has 5 pariſh churches, an univerſity, 12 convents, and about 10,000 inhabitants: 18 miles SE. Saluzzo, and 30 S. Turin. Long. 25. 30. E. Ferro. Lat. 44. 24. N.—On the 16th of April, 1796, a battle was fought here between the Piedmonteſe and the French, in which the latter were victorious, taking 2300 priſoners, 11 ſtandards, 8 pieces of cannon, and 15 waggons.

MONMOUTH, a town of England, in a county of the same name, situated between the rivers Munnow and Wye, with a bridge over each, and a third over the river Trothy, which comes just below the others. It is a large handsome town, and has been of note ever since the conquest, when the castle, now in ruins, was a stately edifice, and the remains of its fortifications show it was very strong. That once stately castle, which was the birth-place of our conqueror of France, Henry V. from hence called Henry of Monmouth, lies now buried in its own ruins. It was built round, and mounted upon a hill, with a high and strong tower in the midst of it, raised upon another mount. Here are two churches, though the town consists but of one parish. In the monastery here, our great antiquarian Geoffrey of Monmouth, wrote his history of Great Britain, which is, for the most part, looked upon as fabulous, though learned men have undertaken the defence of it. He was born and lived here in the 12th century, and wrote his history about the year 1152. He was at that time bishop of St. Asaph. In the year 1646, Oliver Cromwell took Monmouth Castle, together with that of Ragland; and, when Oliver was at Monmouth, a person of the name of Evans attempted to shoot him, in the parlour of a house then occupied by a Mr. Fortune, who entertained Oliver. Evans was prevented from perpetrating that act by some bye-standers, who apprehended that Oliver's soldiers would immediately burn the town and destroy the inhabitants. This borough, in conjunction with those of Uske and Newport, both in this county, sends but one member to parliament. It was first imprivileged to send members to parliament by Henry VIII. Edward VI. is said to have incorporated it, in the year 1550, but the present charter was granted by Charles I. It is governed by a mayor, recorder, &c. The chief trade of this place is with Bristol, by the Wye, which runs into the Severn, below Chepstow. It has a good and plentiful market on Saturdays, for corn and provisions of all sorts: 33 miles N. Bristol, and 128 W. London.

MONMOUTH, a town of United America, in the state of New Jersey, where the British troops, under general Clinton, were defeated by the Americans, under general Washington.

MONMOUTH ISLAND, one of the Bashee islands, in the Eastern Indian Sea.

MONMOUTHSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the north by Brecknockshire and Herefordshire, on the east by Herefordshire and Gloucestershire, from the latter of which it is separated by the river Wye, on the south by the Severn, and on the west by Glamorganshire; about 28 miles in length and 20 in breadth. It contains seven towns and 127 parishes. Before the reign of Charles II. Monmouthshire was considered as part of Wales; but being thus added to the Oxford circuit, it has, from that time, been considered as an English county. It is, in general, mountainous, but, towards the east, fertile both in corn and pasture, and tolerably well wooded; the western part is more mountainous than the east, and less favourable for the plough, but very well adapted for the breeding of sheep, and, in the vallies, for pasturing cattle. The principal rivers are the Usk, which crosses it from north to south, the Wye, and the Monnow. The towns are Monmouth, Abergavenny, Caerleon, Chepstow, Newport, Pontypool, and Usk. Three members are returned to the British parliament, viz. two for the county, and one for the town of Monmouth.

MONNOW, or Munnow, a river of England, which runs into the Wye, at Monmouth.

Monnières, a town of France, in the department of the Lower Loire, and chief place of a canton, in the district of Clisson: 1½ league NW. Clisson.

MONOCASY, a river of United America, in the ſtate of Maryland, which runs into the Patomak.

MONOEMUGI, or Mono-Emugi, or Nimaama, a kingdom of Africa, ſaid to be of vaſt extent, the internal parts reaching to Abyſſinia northward; on the eaſt it is bounded by the kingdoms of Mongalio, Mozambique, and other ſmall ſtates lying along the coaſt of the Indian Sea, on the ſouth it is bounded by Monomotapa, on the weſt by Congo and Angola; but the real limits are unknown. However, all writers agree, that this ſovereign is a powerful and rich prince, and hath ſubdued moſt of the petty kingdoms round. He is ſaid to have many rich gold, ſilver, and copper mines in his dominions, by means of which he carries on a commerce with Abyſſinia and other countries, as well as with ſome of the Eaſtern coaſters, with whom he is forced to exchange that precious metal for Indian and European commodities, for want of having ſome port of his own on either the eaſtern or weſtern ſea. Elephants being here alſo very numerous, vaſt quantities of ivory are exported by them into thoſe kingdoms; from all which that emperor reaps a conſiderable yearly profit, and his ſubjects no leſs a conveniency. All, therefore, we ſhall add with relation to this unknown empire, is, that M. de Liſle, in his Atlas, divides it into the five following kingdoms or provinces, viz. The Maracates, the Moſſagueres, the kingdom of the Bengas; of Maſty, and of Maravi; the laſt of which M. d'Anville places on the ſouthermoſt verge of the lake of that name, which is all we can find concerning them.

MONOK, a town of Hungary: 12 miles WNW. Tokay.

MONOMONIL, a town of North America, on the weſt ſide of Green Bay. Long. 87. 28. W. Greenwich. Lat. 44. 32. N.

MONOMOTAPA, an extenſive country of Africa, ſituated at ſome diſtance from the Indian Sea, between the 44th and 52d degree of longitude eaſt from Ferro, and between the 15th and 20th degrees of ſouth latitude. But if we take in all the other inferior kingdoms, which are either ſubject or tributary to it, it will extend vaſtly farther; ſouthward, almoſt as far as the Cape of Good Hope, and on the north-weſt, as far as the confines of the kingdom of Congo; for ſo far on theſe two ſides the authority of its monarchs is ſaid to prevail; though, on the weſt and part of the north-weſt, it is confined by that of Monoemugi. The climate of Monomotapa is temperate, notwithſtanding the greater part of it lies within the ſouthern tropic; the air is clear and healthy, the ſoil fertile, and ſo well watered, as to abound with paſture-grounds, on which are bred vaſt multitudes of cattle, eſpecially of the larger ſort, which the inhabitants ſet a higher value on than their gold. Their ground produces plenty of rice, millet, and other grain, though no wheat. They have great variety of excellent fruit-trees, and abundance of ſugar-cane, which grows here without any culture. Their foreſts ſwarm with wild beaſts, and various kinds of game; their rivers, of which they have a great number, abound not only with fiſh, but with gold likewiſe, which they ſweep away from the mines through which they run; yet, in ſpite of all this abundance, the country is, for the moſt part, but thinly inhabited. Except thoſe lands which are watered by the Cuamo and Sancto Spirito, and a number of others which flow into them, the reſt of the inland parts are ſandy, dry, or barren; inſomuch that the few inhabitants that live in them are forced to go a great way for water to waſh their gold duſt, whenever their ciſterns fail them for want of rain. They have neither horſes nor any other beaſts of burthen; but vaſt herds of elephants, moſtly wild, of which they deſtroy many thouſands yearly, as may be eaſily judged by the vaſt quantity of ivory which is brought out of it, and ſold to the Portugueſe. They have a kind of ſtag they call alſinge, of an extraordinary ſize and ſwiftneſs; and oſtriches of a large ſize, whoſe greaſe or oil, either outwardly applied, or taken inwardly, is reckoned a ſovereign remedy againſt pains and aches, ſprains and ſtiffneſs of the limbs. The natives are all black, with woolly hair, notwithſtanding their diſtance from the equinoctial line, and the ſnows which fall in ſuch vaſt quantities upon the mountains. In other reſpects, they are well-ſhaped, robuſt, and healthy, and more ſprightly and docile, than thoſe of Quiloa, Mombaſo, and Melinda. They delight in war, which they prefer to the dull and low way of living by traffic. As for the lower claſs, they are commonly brought up to diving; and are ſo dextrous in it, that their chief buſineſs is to fetch ſand or mud from the bottom of the rivers, ponds, and lakes, and to ſeparate the gold that is mixed with it, which they afterwards exchange with the Portugueſe for cotton cloths, and variety of other merchandizes and trinkets, which they bring thither from India and Europe. They feed on the fleſh of oxen, and elephants, ſalted and dried fiſh, and a great variety of fruits. Their bread is made of rice or millet, baked in thin cakes, and their drink ſour milk, and oil of ſeſamen, or Turkey wheat. The richer ſort have ſome ſtrong kinds of liquor, made of honey, millet, and rice. They have, among others, the palm wine, which is eſteemed a royal liquor, and drank much at court. The Monomotapans go naked almoſt as low as the girdle, but from thence downwards, are covered with a piece of cloth, of various colours, and dreſs more or leſs richly, according to their rank or circumſtances. That of the common people is of dyed cotton: but perſons of quality wear India ſilks, or cotton embroidered with gold, over which they commonly have a lion's or ſome other wild beaſt's ſkin, with the tail hanging behind, trailing on the ground. The men are allowed to marry as many wives as they can maintain; but the firſt is looked upon as the chief and miſtreſs, and her children as the father's heirs, whilſt the reſt are only deemed as ſervants. The king or emperor is ſaid to have above a thouſand wives, all of them the daughters of ſome of his vaſſal princes; but the firſt alone hath the titles and honour of a queen. He never alters his dreſs, but goes attired like his anceſtors; he neither allows himſelf, nor any of his wives or family, to wear any clothes that are manufactured out of his dominions, for fear they ſhould have ſome poiſon or charm concealed in them. The metropolis of this empire is called Benematapa, or Banamatapa; and by Le Blanc and others, Medrogan. It is a ſpacious city, ſituate about ſix days' journey from an ancient palace, named Simbaces, and about twenty miles weſt of Sofala. The houſes are neat, and more or leſs high and lofty, according to the rank of the owners. They are moſtly white-waſhed within and without, and adorned with beautiful cloths of cotton, finely wrought or dyed, which make the moſt conſiderable part of their furniture. But the greateſt ornament of the city, is the imperial palace, a large ſpacious fabric, though of wood, well flanked with towers, and with four avenues or ſtately gates, continually kept by a numerous guard.

MONONGAHELA, a river of the United States of America, which joins the Allegany, at Pittſburg, where the united ſtreams are called the Ohio.

MONPREIS, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Stiria: 8 miles SE. Cilley.

MONQUEGNA, or Monquegua, a juriſdiction of South America, in the biſhopric of Arequipa. This juriſdiction extends at leaſt 40 leagues in length, and in a happy climate, adorned with large vineyards, from the produce of which, great quantities of wine and brandy are made: theſe conſtitute its whole commerce, ſupplying all the provinces bordering on the Cordilleras, as far as Potoſi, by land carriage; while they are exported by ſea to Callao, where they are greatly valued. Here are alſo papas and olives. The principal town, which bears the ſame name, is inhabited by Spaniards, and, among them, ſeveral noble and opulent families: 70 miles SE. Arequipa.

MONREAL, a town of Spain, in the province of Aragon: 23 miles W. Calataiud.

MONREAL, a town of Spain, in the province of Navarre: 8 miles SE. Pamplona.

MONREALE, a town of Sicily, in the vally of Mazara, erected into an archbiſhopric in the year 1183, which has been ſuppreſſed, and the revenues appropriated to the marine, for the defence of the iſland againſt corſairs: 3 miles WSW. Palermo.

MONRICOUX, a town of France, in the department of the Lot: 4 leagues NE. Montauban.

MONROYO, a town of Spain, in the kingdom of Aragon, on the frontiers of Catalonia and Valencia. It was formerly a ſtrong town, but ſiding with the archduke Charles, it was taken by the troops of Philip, given up to pillage, and afterwards burned: 20 miles S. Alcaniz, and 27 W. Tortoſa.

MONS, a city of Hainaut, ſo called from its ſituation on a hill; in Latin Montes Hannoniæ, and by the Flemings Berghen-in-Hanegouw; to diſtinguiſh it from ſome other cities of the country. The river Trouide, which runs through it, and fills its ditches, joins with the river Haiſne in the fauxbourg. It had an ancient caſtle, ſaid to have been built by Julius Cæſar, who made it a place of arms; they tell us likewiſe that Ambiorix, king of the Eburons, aſſiſted the Nervii in beſieging Quintus Cicero, brother of the celebrated orator, who commanded a Roman legion in that place, and was defeated by Cæſar, fifty years before Chriſt. This caſtle was demoliſhed in the year 1618, and the materials were uſed to build the choir of the church of St. Elizabeth. Near it was a tower which could hardly be equalled for the beauty of its architecture. The magiſtracy is compoſed of a chief, and ten echevins, two penſioners, three greffiers, &c. The privileges of this city are ſo conſiderable as to be compared with Lyons and Utrecht. The town is large, the ſtreets are broad, and the great market-place very ſpacious, on which you ſee the town-houſe, the palace of the government, and that of the council of the province. The town-houſe is a venerable large old building, on which the States erected a fine ſteeple in 1716. Theſe three palaces, which are the chief ornaments of the city, are very finely adorned with ſculpture and painting. This is alſo a place of good trade, for divers commodities, eſpecially woollen ſtuffs, which are manufactured here in great quantities. The provincial council or parliament aſſembles in this city, and receives appeals from the reſt of the towns of Auſtrian Hainaut. The great church is a fine building, the ſide altars and chapel are all of marble and jaſper; and there is a marble tomb, finely embelliſhed; the ſtatues, among which the four cardinal virtues, and the reſurrection, are much eſteemed. Mons has ſeveral times ſuffered the calamities of war. In the year 1572, Louis comte of Naſſau, brother of William prince of Orange, ſurprized the city by ſending in ſome ſoldiers, diſguiſed as dealers in wine, who ſeized the gates, and admitted the comte, the 24th of May, at four o'clock in the morning. It was beſieged by the duke of Alva's ſon, the 23d of July following, and ſubmitted on the 19th of September, notwithſtanding the vigorous defence made by the comte of Naſſau, and the efforts which the prince of Orange made to ſuccour it. In the year 1677, Mons was blockaded by the French army, under the command of the mareſchal de Humières; and the blockade was continued to the following year, when the citizens began to ſuffer a famine. William prince of Orange advanced with an army of 30,000 men, to ſuccour the beſieged; the duke of Luxemburg, who then commanded the French army, was ſo confident of the good ſituation he was in, that he ſent word to the mareſchal d'Eſtrades, one of the French plenipotentiaries at Nimmegen, that he was ſo poſted, that if he had but 10,000 men, and the prince of Orange 40,000, he was certain he could not be forced, much leſs while his army was ſuperior to the enemy. However, the prince reſolved to break through all obſtacles, and began his march to attack the French, who were encamped near the Abby of St. Denis, to cover the army engaged in the blockade. The attack commenced on the 14th of Auguſt, at two o'clock in the afternoon, while the duke of Luxemburg, depending on the treaty then carrying on at Nimmegen, was at dinner, and had made no proviſion for an engagement: the battle was long and bloody, and the French were driven from the field, leaving the greater part of their wounded, and a conſiderable quantity of tents, baggage, and warlike ſtores; the ſiege of Mons was immediately raiſed, and the next day it was publicly known that the peace had been concluded at Nimmegen, of which the prince was made acquainted the day before: this is called the battle of St. Denis. In the beginning of March, 1691, Mons was again beſieged by the French king in perſon, accompanied by the dauphin, the dukes of Orleans and Chartres. The garriſon conſiſted of about 6000 men, commanded by the prince of Bergue; but the beſiegers carried on their works with ſuch rapidity, as they could not withſtand. King William no ſooner underſtood that the place was inveſted, than he ordered prince Waldeck to aſſemble the army, determined to march againſt the enemy in perſon. Fifty thouſand men were ſoon collected at Halle, near Bruſſels; but when he went thither, he found the Spaniards had neglected to provide carriages and other neceſſaries for the expedition. Meanwhile, the burghers of Mons ſeeing their town in danger of being utterly deſtroyed by the bombs and cannon of the enemy, preſſed the governor to capitulate; and even threatened to introduce the beſiegers; ſo that he was forced to comply, and obtained very honourable conditions. In the year 1709, the allies being reſolved to attempt the ſiege of Mons, prince Eugene and the duke of Marlborough detached the hereditary prince of Heſſe, with 4000 men, and the reſt of the army followed; but the French army being encamped at Blangy, to obſtruct their progreſs, the allies attacked them, and brought on the battle of Malplaquet, after which the ſiege commenced; the trenches were opened on the 26th, and the city ſurrendered, by capitulation, on the 20th of October. The marquis de Ceva Grimaldi, lieutenant-general of the army of Spain, marched out, with the garriſon, on the 23d: the French were conducted to Maubeuge, and the Spaniards to Namur. The Dutch retained the military government of the place, till the year 1716, when they reſigned it to the troops of the emperor, in virtue of the barrier treaty, concluded at the latter end of the year 1715. In the year 1746, mareſchal Saxe inveſted Mons, with a large train of artillery, and made his approaches with ſuch impetuoſity, that notwithſtanding a brave defence, the garriſon was obliged to capitulate on the 27th of June, after the place had been inveſted 28 days; and, while in the hands of the French, the fortifications were demoliſhed, in which ſtate it was reſtored to the emperor, by the peace of Aix la-Chapelle. Immediately after the battle of Gemappe, Dumourier ſummoned the city of Mons, which ſurrendered the ſucceeding morning, and was taken poſſeſſion of by general Bournonville: 5½ poſts SW. Bruſſels, and 28 NNE. Paris. Long. 21. 33. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 30. N.—This city, during the preſent war, was ſeveral times taken and retaken. It is now, with its territory, annexed to France.

The town and caſtle are ſuppoſed to have been built by Baldwyn, lieutenant of the marches to William the Conqueror ; from whom it was called Tre Faldwyn, but took the preſent name from Roger de Montgomery, earl of Shrewſbury, who won the caſtle of Baldwyn. In the year 1094, it was taken by the Welch ; and many were the ſkirmiſhes at different times for the poſſeſſion of the place. In the year 1231, it was taken and burned, by Llewellin prince of Wales. In the civil wars, it was ſeized for the uſe of the parliament, by Sir Thomas Middleton, in 1644 ; who, on the appearance of the king's army, was obliged to make a ſudden retreat to Oſweſtry, and leave it ill provided, both with garriſon and proviſions. The royal forces, under lord Biron, laid ſiege to it ; but ſir Thomas being joined by ſir William Brereton, ſir John Meldrum, and ſir William Fairfax, returned, under the command of Brereton, with about 3000 men, to the relief of the place. The king's army was 5000 ſtrong, who, on the approach of the enemy, took poſſeſſion of the hill above the caſtle. The caſtle was relieved, and a moſt bloody battle enſued. The king's army deſcended from their poſt, and making a moſt vigorous attack on the forces of the parliament, at firſt gained conſiderable advantage ; but the laſt, actuated by deſpair, made the moſt violent efforts : and at length, obtained a moſt complete victory. The purſuit was continued near 20 miles. Above 500 were ſlain, and 1400 taken priſoners. The loſs on the ſide of the parliament, only 40 ſlain, and about 60 wounded. The caſtle met with the fate of all others, being diſmantled by order of the commons. The remains impend over the town. They ſtand on a projecting ridge, of a great height and ſteepneſs ; and, towards the end, quite precipitous. The reliques of this fortreſs are very ſmall. It had been divided by four foſſes, cut in the rock ; each perhaps had its draw-bridge. Between the end of the building and the precipice, is a level ſpot, the yard or parade of the place. Montgomery is governed by two bailiffs, town-clerk, &c. and ſends one member to the Britiſh parliament. It has a weekly market on Thurſday : 50 miles NW. Worceſter, and 161 WNW. London.

MONTMELIAN, a town and fortreſs of the duchy of Savoy, near the Iſere ; has only one church, and two convents : the country round is very agreeably diverſified with hills and mountains, covered with vines for the ſpace of two leagues round : the wine is very good. The fortreſs is ſituated ated on the ſummit of a mountain, inacceſſible, except towards the town. It is founded on a rock, compoſed of five good baſtions, irregularly cotered, and well flanked, with a foſſe, cut in the rock. It has two ranges of fortifications, one above the other, with a tower in the middle. The caſtle, which is large and lofty, is the reſidence of the governor. The place is of great conſequence, becauſe it is the key of the whole country, and ſuppoſed to be impregnable, on account of its ſtrong garriſon of 300 men, eſteemed ſome of the beſt troops in Europe, as well as the abundance of proviſions and warlike ſtores with which it is provided. When Francis I. king of France, invaded Savoy, in the year 1535, he took Montmelian, through the treachery of the governor, Francis Clermont, a Neapolitan, who deſerted to the French, to eſcape the puniſhment he well deſerved. Louis XIII. beſieged it, in 1630; but the comte Santena, then governor, defended it with great fidelity and courage for thirteen months, till a mine threw down a part of the rock which joined the rampart, and compelled the French to raiſe the ſiege. It was taken by the marquis de Crequi, in the reign of Henry IV. and by marechal de Catinat, in 1692, in the reign of Louis XIV. but reſtored to Savoy, by a peace concluded at Turin, in 1696: 6½ miles SSE. Chambery, and 22 NE. Grenoble.

MONTPELLIER, a city of France, and capital of the department of the Herault. This city was built on a hill, near the river Lez, after Charlemagne had demoliſhed Maguelone, which ſerved as an aſylum for the Saracens in their depredations; and the biſhop's ſee, which had been removed from Maguelone to Subſtantion, was eſtabliſhed at Montpellier. In the year 1180, an univerſity was founded here, for the ſtudy of phyſic, by ſome phyſicians who were driven out of Spain. In the year 1706, an academy of ſciences was inſtituted here. Montpellier contains a great number of good houſes, but the ſtreets are narrow. It is defended by a citadel, which commands the town and neighbourhood. The principal manufacture here is verdigris, in which it carries on a very conſiderable trade, as alſo in wool, which is brought from the Mediterranean, wine, aqua vitæ, Hungary water, cinnamon water, capillaire, eſſence of Bergamot, lemons, &c. and likewiſe great quantities of woollen carpets, fuſtians, and ſilk ſtockings. Theſe commodities are ſent by the canal to Cette, which is the ſeaport of Montpellier. The number of inhabitants is eſtimated at 78,000: 30 poſts ENE. Toulouſe, and 95½ S. Paris. Long. 21. 33. E. Coblentz, and 4 NE. Treves.

MONTREAL, a town of North America, in Canada. It ſtands in an iſland of the ſame name, in the river St. Laurence. It is a well peopled place, of an oblong form, the ſtreets very open, and the houſes well built. The fortifications are pretty ſtrong, being ſurrounded by a wall, flanked with redoubts, which ſerve inſtead of baſtions; the ditch is about 8 feet deep, and of a proportionable breadth, but dry; encompaſſing the town, except that part which lies towards the river. It has four gates, one of them very ſmall. It has alſo a fort or citadel, the batteries of which command the ſtreets of the town from the one end to the other; and over the river St. Peter is a bridge. The bank of the river St. Laurence, on which the town of Montreal is built, riſes inſenſibly from the water's edge to the oppoſite part of the town: which is divided into two parts, called the Lower and the Upper Town; though the aſcent in paſſing from the former to the latter is ſcarcely perceivable. The iſland of Montreal, in which the town is built, is about ten leagues long, and four broad, being very fruitful in corn, and abounding with elegant plantations. It has its name from a mountain of great height, ſituated about the middle of the iſland, which has been ſince given to the town itſelf, originally called Ville Marie. The river is not navigable at Montreal, on account of ſeveral cataracts and rocks, which obſtruct the paſſage. Though the lands of Montreal produce Indian corn in abundance, and all the vegetables of Europe flouriſh in it, yet the French were never able to eſtabliſh any ſtaple commodity to anſwer their demands on their mother country. Their trade with the Indians produced all their returns to that market. The furs of the beaver, with thoſe of foxes and racoons, the ſkins of deer, and all the branches of the peltry, together with what corn and lumber they could ſend to the Weſt Indies, conſtituted their whole ſtock of merchandize. And theſe were found ſufficient to render their lives agreeable. This town was taken by the Engliſh, under the command of general Amherſt, in the year 1760: 34 leagues SW. Quebec. Long. 73. W. Greenwich. Lat. 45. 38. N.

MONTROSE, a town of Scotland, in the county of Angus, ſituated on a gentle eminence, in a peninſula, formed by the South Eſk, and the German Sea. It is a royal borough, and, in union with Aberdeen, Arbroath, Bervie, and Brechin, returns one member to the Britiſh Parliament. The corporation conſiſts of a provoſt, three bailies, dean of guild, &c. The harbour is commodious, and the trade has, for a long time, been conſiderable. In the begining of this century, and till about the year 1744, Montroſe was diſtinguiſhed by its ſhipping. It was alſo famous for a market for linen yarn, which was brought from all parts of the counties of Angus and Mearns, and ſold here, whence it was ſent to London and Mancheſter. The firſt manufacture of any conſequence, that of canvas, was erected here, by a company, in 1745, but this was ſo much overdone, at the peace of 1783, that all the great companies here, and moſt of the ſmaller ones, gave up, turned their working-houſes into dwelling houſes, and ſold off their machinery and utenſils, &c. Little, therefore, is now attempted in that line, compared with what was done before. During this period, two different companies ſet up a large manufacture of coloured and white thread, and were followed by others, on a ſmaller ſcale. It is at preſent the moſt conſiderable article of manufacture in the town. Some brown ſheetings and Oſnaburghs, are alſo made here, and a pretty conſiderable trade is carried on in the commiſſion line, in Oſnaburghs and yarn ſent to Glaſgow. The cotton manufactures have been lately attempted, and various ſmaller articles, as ſtockings, &c. are manufactured. There is a good tannery and rope works, belonging to different companies. This town has been long diſtinguiſhed for making and exporting excellent malt, and for making good malt-liquor of all kinds. To Montroſe there belong, commonly, about ſixteen or eighteen fiſhermen, but many of them are old, and, for ſome years paſt, they have had very indifferent ſucceſs. At the harbour of Montroſe there is a good wet dock, where ſhips are built and repaired, not only for this but for other ports. The principal articles imported from foreign parts are pearl-aſhes, wood-aſhes, flax, hemp, iron, clover-ſeed, whale-blubber, whale-fins, alias whalebone, fir-timber, battens, deals, lintſeed, ſpruce-beer, tar, barley and beer, malt, ſail-cloth, and ſalmon. The number of inhabitants, in the year 1790, was 6194: 23 miles NE. Dundee, and 47 NE. Perth. Long. 0. 45. E. Edinburg. Lat. 36. 40. N.

MONTSERRAT, an iſland of the Weſt Indies, diſcovered by Columbus, in the year 1493, about three leagues long, and nearly as much wide, of an oval form. In the year 1632, Sir Thomas Warner, governor of St. Chriſtopher's, ſent hither a ſmall colony of Engliſh. Lord Willoughby afterwards ſent a reinforcement of hands to ſettle it in a regular manner; and their induſtry turned to ſuch good account, that for ſeveral years this iſland proſpered more than that of Antigua, and exported ſugar, ginger, cotton, and indigo. The iſland is divided into two pariſhes, and the number of militia which, at this time, it can raiſe, excluſive of negroes, is ſaid to amount to above 500 men. In 1668, after the French had made themſelves maſters of Antigua, M. de la Barre made a deſcent upon Montſerrat, which he reduced. In the year 1712, the French took and burnt all the ſhipping in the road, excepting one veſſel, which made its eſcape, and then they returned to Guadaloupe. Theſe hoſtilities happening at a time when the negociations for peace were in dependence, the Britiſh plenipotentiaries, at the treaty of Utrecht, inſiſted upon an indemnification; and ſome ſtipulations of that kind were inſerted in the eleventh article of that treaty; but the ſufferers never received any ſatisfaction, but what they afterwards obtained from the Britiſh parliament. The iſland of Montſerrat, as to its climate, ſoil, animals, and commerce, is pretty much the ſame with the other Engliſh Caribbee iſlands. The mountains produce cedars, cypreſs-trees, the iron-tree, with other woods, and ſome odoriferous ſhrubs. It is well watered and fruitful; and the planters here, formerly, raiſed a great deal of indigo. The ſeas abound with fiſh. Long. 61. 6. W. Greenwich. Lat. 16. 45. N.

MORAVIA (Marquiſate of), a country of Germany, bounded on the north by Bohemia and Sileſia, on the eaſt by Sileſia and Hungary, on the ſouth by Auſtria, and on the weſt by Bohemia ; containing about 1400 ſquare miles. Towards Hungary, Bohemia, and Sileſia, it is partly environed by mountains, and partly by woods. Above one half of it is mountainous and woody, and many of the former are ſo rough, as to be almoſt deſolate. In the more champaign circles, tracts, and parts, are many moraſſes, bogs, and lakes. In the mountainous regions, the air, indeed, is rough and cold, ſo that, in many places, for near the whole ſummer, the inhabitants muſt uſe a ſtove ; but theſe parts, notwithſtanding, are wholeſomer than the above-mentioned champaign territories. More corn grows here than the inhabitants conſume. In it is alſo plenty of hemp and flax ; nor are table fruit-trees or vegetables wanting. It produces, likewiſe, good ſaffron. Some white and red wine is made in thoſe tracts lying towards Hungary and Auſtria, which are in no reſpect inferior to the Auſtrian territories. The paſturage is good, and maintains all ſorts of cattle. It is remarkable, that in ſome places they alſo dig frankincenſe and myrrh out of the earth. Game is plentiful. There is no want of veniſon here ; there are likewiſe wolves, bears, and a ſpecies of leopards, of the ſize of dogs, but thicker, which are called Ryſowe, with ſome beavers. In the circle of Brunn, are quarries of marble, baſtard diamonds, amethyſts, and other minerals, alum, iron mines and works. In the circle of Znaym, were formerly mines of gold ; and, at this day, are ſome of iron, ſulphur, ſalt-petre, and vitriol. Here and there are ſome mineral ſprings, which are impregnated with ſulphur, alum, vitriol, and ſalt-petre ; and there are likewiſe acid ſprings, but ſalt they want. The number of towns, villages, and market towns in Moravia, has been eſtimated at 2550. The language of the inhabitants is a dialect of the Sclavonic, and little differing from the Bohemian. The German language, too, is very common in Moravia. The ſtates of the country conſiſt of the clergy, lords, knights, and burgeſſes. Chriſtianity was introduced ſo early as the 8th century. The whole country is of the Roman Catholic church, and ſubject to the eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction of the biſhop of Olmutz. The principal articles of commerce conſiſt in their manufactures of cloth, iron, glaſs, paper, gunpowder, &c. which, on the whole, are conſiderable. Moravia was anciently inhabited by the Quadi, who were driven out by the Sclavi. While belonging to the latter, it was of greater extent than at preſent. The kings of this country were, till the ninth century, powerful and independent ; but afterwards the emperor Charlemagne not only vanquiſhed king Lech, but his ſon and ſucceſſor Louis, made king Mogemir alſo his vaſſal. A part of it, which, to this day, alone bears the name of Moravia, the Bohemian dukes Brzetiſlaw and Ulrich, in 1026, reduced by force of arms ; and the former, on his death, was reckoned among the princes thereof. From that time, this country having, in the year 1086, been declared a marquiſate by the German king, Henry IV. and united with Bohemia, has been frequently reſigned as a fief, by the dukes and kings of Bohemia to their ſons, brothers, or relations, and ſometimes even divided. Since the time of king Matthias, Moravia has enjoyed no peculiar marggrave of its own, but has conſtantly remained annexed to the crown of Bohemia. Moravia contributes about one-third part to the exactions which Bohemia pays. Towards the maintenance of the military ſtate of the whole Auſtrian hereditary countries, it contributes yearly 1,856,490 florins. Seven regiments of foot, one of cuiraſſiers, and one of dragoons, are at preſent quartered in Moravia. The whole marquiſate is divided into ſix circles, each of which has its circle-captain, whoſe authority extends to the quartering, marching, and maintenance of the ſoldiers. Olmutz is the capital.

MOREA, a country of European Turkey, forming a peninſula united to the reſt of Greece, by a narrow neck of land, called the Iſthmus of Corinth, ſo famed for the Iſthmian games, celebrated there, in honour of Neptune. It was anciently called Peloponneſus, and, in more remote times Ægialca and Apia. It once conſiſted of the following ſmall kingdoms: Sicyon, Argos, and Mycene, Corinth, Achaia Proper, Arcadia, and Laconia. Its preſent name of the Morea, is ſaid to be derived from Morus, a mulberry-tree, either from its reſembling the leaf of that tree in ſhape, or from the great number of mulberry-trees it produces. It has not only ſeveral rivers, lakes, and mountains, but alſo many fertile and delightful plains. At the treaty of Carlowitz, the Turks ceded all the Morea to the Venetians, but, in the year 1715, again diſpoſſeſſed them of it. It is divided into four diſtricts.

MOROCCO (Empire of), a country of Africa, including Fez, bounded on the north by the ſtraits of Gibraltar and the Mediterranean, on the eaſt by Algiers and Biledulgerid, on the ſouth by Sahara, and on the weſt by the Atlantic Ocean, about 150 leagues in length, and 130 in its greateſt breadth. The territories of Morocco are formed by the union of ſeveral ſmall kingdoms, anciently limited to a ſingle province, and perpetually at variance among themſelves, till at length they were ſubdued, and united under one ſovereign by the ſherifs. The ſouthern part of the empir contai contains the kingdoms of Suz, Tarudant, Morocco, Tafilet, and Segilmeſſa, and the northern thoſe of Fez, Mequinez, and Tremecen; the latter, which was formerly ſubject to Morocco, having been conquered by the Turks of Algiers, is now a part of the territories of that regency. The kingdom of Morocco comprehends at preſent the provinces of Morocco, Eſcura, Ramna, Duquella, Ada, Sherma, Hea, Suz, Dra, and Geſula. Beſides the provinces which compoſe the Empire of Morocco, the ſherifs claim the ſovereignty of the deſert of Sahara, an Arabic word, ſignifying deſert; but their authority over theſe princes is very precarious, as it depends on the pleaſure of their ſubjects and temporary circumſtances. They retain for the emperor of Morocco that reſpect and veneration which his power, and the idea they have of his ſupremacy, as head of the church, inſpire; but they pay or refuſe tribute as they think fit. The whole empire of Morocco is ſurrounded to the eaſt, north, and ſouth, by a chain of vallies and mountains, which are diſtinguiſhed according to the number and names of the tribes by whom they are inhabited: the weſtern part of it forms a ſort of plain, which, in many places, is 15 or 20 leagues in breadth, from eaſt to weſt. The climate of the empire of Morocco is, in general, ſufficiently temperate, healthy, and not ſo hot as its ſituation might lead us to ſuppoſe. The chain of mountains which forms the Atlas, on the eaſtern ſide, defends it from the eaſt winds, that would ſcorch up the earth where they frequent. The ſummit of theſe mountains is always covered with ſnow, which falls ſo heavily in winter, as often to bury the Brebes, who inhabit theſe vallies. The rains are tolerably regular, in winter, in the climate of Morocco, and are even abundant, though the atmoſphere is not loaded with clouds as in northern latitudes. Thoſe rains which fall by intervals are favourable to the earth, and increaſe its fecundity. In January, the country is covered with verdure, and enamelled with flowers. Barley is cut in March, but the wheat harveſt is in June. All fruits are early in this climate; in forward years the vintage is over in the beginning of September. Locuſts, which have ſo often laid deſolate hot countries, ſometimes commit the moſt dreadful ravages in the empire of Morocco. The devaſtations of locuſts increaſe the price of proviſions, and often occaſion famines; but the Moors find a kind of compenſation in making food of theſe inſects; prodigious quantities are brought to market ſalted and dried, like red herrings. They have an oily and rancid taſte, which habit only can render agreeable; they are eaten here, however, with pleaſure. The winters in Morocco are not ſevere, nor is there an abſolute need of fire. In the coldeſt weather the thermometer ſeldom ſinks to more than five degrees above the freezing point. The ſoil of Morocco is exceedingly fertile; the land, light and ſandy on the weſtern coaſt, contains in itſelf ſalts ſufficient to make it fruitful. To theſe ſalts, and to the abundant dews muſt we attribute a humidity almoſt corroſive, which, without making any ſenſible impreſſion on bodies, quickly covers with ruſt, iron, ſteel, metals, and even the keys and ſciſſars carried in the pocket. The increaſe of corn in Morocco is often as ſixty to one, and thirty is held to be but an indifferent harveſt. The property of land is entirely precarious, ſo that each individual grows little more than ſufficient for his own wants. Hence it happens, when the harveſt fails, from the ravages of locuſts, or the intemperance of ſeaſons, theſe people are expoſed to miſery, ſuch as Europeans have no conception of, who enjoy a ſtable adminiſtration, which obviates and provides for all their wants. Oranges, lemons, and thick-ſkinned fruits, the trees of which require little nurture, grow in the open fields, and there are very large plantations of them found, which they take the trouble to water to increaſe their product. Their vines yield excellent grapes. Figs, melons, water melons, apricots, apples, and pears, are in tolerable plenty. The tree called the prickly pear, or the Barbary fig, is plentifully found in the empire of Morocco. The olive is every where found along the coaſt, but particularly to the ſouth. In the province of Suz, between the 25th and 30th degrees, the inhabitants have an almond harveſt, which varies little, becauſe of the mildneſs of the climate. The palm-tree is common in the ſouthern provinces of Morocco; but dates ripen there with difficulty, and few are good, except in the province of Suz, and toward Tafilet, where they are ſtill better, becauſe of its diſtance from the ſea. On the coaſt of Salee and Mamora, there are foreſts of oak, which produce acorns near two inches long. They taſte like cheſtnuts, and are eaten raw and roaſted. The empire of Morocco alſo produces much wax; but, ſince it has been ſubjected by the emperor to the payment of additional duties, the country people have very much neglected the care of their hives. Salt abounds in the empire, and in ſome places on the coaſt requires only the trouble of gathering. The Moors cultivate their lands only in proportion to their wants; hence two-thirds of the empire, at leaſt, lie waſte. The inhabitants of the empire of Morocco, known by the name of Moors, are a mixture of Arabian and African nations, formed into tribes; with the origin of whom we are but imperfectly acquainted. Theſe tribes, each ſtrangers to the other, and ever divided by traditional hatred or prejudice, ſeldom mingle. The empire of Morocco under the ſherifs, began about the end of the 13th century. This title is applied to a deſcendant of Mahomet, and is equal to that of emir or prince; oſe of Morocco ſprung from the northern parts of Lybia.

MOROCCO, a city of Africa, and capital of the empire ſo called, ſituated in a pleaſant plain, planted with palm-trees, having Mount Atlas to the eaſt. The city of Morocco itſelf, expoſed to the devaſtations of different conquerors, has preſerved nothing but its form. The extent of the walls, which ſtill exiſt entire, except in ſome few places, ſuppoſes a city which might contain 300,000 ſouls: at preſent this capital is little better than a deſert. The ruins of houſes, heaped one upon another, ſerve only to harbour thieves, who lurk among them to rob the paſſengers. The quarters which have been rebuilt, are conſiderably diſtant from each other; and the houſes are low, dirty, and extremely inconvenient. Mr. Chenier doubts whether it contains 30,000 inhabitants, even when the court is there. Morocco poſſeſſes ſeveral large moſques, but they have no pretenſions to magnificence. Within the walls are a number of large incloſed ſpaces, almoſt entirely detached, containing gardens of orange-trees, and pavilions, in which the princes lodge. Among the number of the public edifices at Morocco we muſt not forget to mention the Elcaiſſeria, a place where ſtuffs and other valuable commodities are expoſed to ſale. At the extremity of the city of Morocco, and very near the palace, is the quarter of the Jews, incloſed by walls near two miles round, where the Jews reſide, under the guard of an alcaid, to protect them from inſult. This ſame quarter was formerly the reſidence of the Spaniſh nobles, or others of that nation, who, from diſcontent, or other motives, entered into the ſervice of the kings of Morocco; and there is ſtill a part of the city, called the quarter of Andaluſia. Not leſs than 3000 Jewiſh families formerly reſided here, as may be eſtimated by the ruins of houſes and ſynagogues. Of this great number there at preſent ſcarcely remain 200 families, expoſed to tyranny and poverty. The emperor's palace, at the extremity of the city of Morocco, fronting Mount Atlas, is a very extenſive and ſolid building. The principal gates are Gothic arches of cut ſtone, embelliſhed with ornaments in the Arabian taſte. Within the walls are various courts and gardens, elegantly laid out by European gardeners. Long. 9. 24. E. Ferro. Lat. 31. 57. N.

MORVIEDRO, or Murviedro, a town of Spain, in the province of Valencia, ſuppoſed to be the ancient Saguntum, deſtroyed by Hannibal, and which fell a victim to its fidelity to the Romans. The inhabitants made a reſiſtance of eight months, and, not receiving the ſuccours they expected from their allies, fed upon the fleſh and blood of their children, and afterwards turned their rage againſt themſelves ; they erected an immenſe pile of wood, and, after ſetting fire to it, precipitated themſelves, their women, ſlaves, and treaſures, into the flames ; ſo that inſtead of a lucrative conqueſt, Hannibal found nothing but a heap of aſhes. The city of Morviedro is full of the remains of its antiquity ; the walls of the houſes, the city gates, and doors of the churches and inns, are covered with Roman inſcriptions. The moſt curious ornaments in Morviedro are the caſtle and the theatre ; the former contains heaps of ruins, which belonged to the monuments of ſeveral centuries, and are at preſent upwards of a quarter of a league in extent. Moſt of the towers and edifices, of which the remain only are now ſeen, appear to have been conſtructed by the Moors, with the materials left them by the Romans ; all the works of the latter, except a few arcades, in good preſervation, towards the ſouth of the caſtle, have totally diſappeared : 25 miles SSE. MOSCOW, or Moſkva, a city of Ruſſia, and capital of a government, on a river of the ſame name. It derives its name from the river Moſkva, which runs on the ſouth ſide of it. Moſcow was founded in the year 1156; at leaſt it appears to have been a city in 1175. It lies in a round ſituation, formed by the winding of the river, and the compaſs of the curve is about thirty-ſix werts, or twenty-four Engliſh miles ; but its circuit is ſaid to have been formerly twice as large. The number of churches in this city is computed at 1600, among which are eleven cathedrals, and 271 pariſh churches : the reſt either belong to convents, or may be looked on as private chapels. Near the churches are hung up ſeveral large bells which are kept continually chiming. Many of the churches have gilt ſteeples, and are magnificently decorated within : the veſtments of the prieſts are alſo very rich. The number of public edifices and areas, or places at Moſcow, amount to forty-three. The mean houſes, indeed, are much more numerous than thoſe that are well built : but the latter are daily increaſing. The ſtreets are broad, and well laid out, but as only a part of them is paved, they are very dirty. This city is divided into four circles, which lie one within another. The interior circle, or the Kremlin, which ſignifies a fortreſs, contains ſeveral buildings ; namely, the old imperial palace, pleaſure-houſe, and ſtables, a victualling houſe, the palace which formerly belonged to the patriarch, nine cathedrals, five convents, four pariſh churches, the public colleges and other offices, and the arſenal. The ſecond circle of the city is called Kitaigorod, or the Chineſe Town : in this circle are five ſtreets, two cathedrals, eighteen pariſh churches, four convents, thirteen noblemen's houſes, and nine public edifices. The third circle, which ſurrounds the former, is Belgorod, or the White Town, ſo called, from a white wall with which it is encompaſſed : it is alſo called the Czar's Town. The Neglina runs through this part of the city from ſouth to north. In this circle ſeveral Knees, Boiars, merchants, and tradeſmen reſide ; but there are alſo many dirty ſpots in this quarter, and the houſes for the moſt part, are very mean. It includes eleven convents, ſeven abbies, ſeventy-ſix pariſh churches, and nine public edifices and areas ; namely, two palaces, a cannon foundery, two market-places, one brewhouſe, one magazine of proviſions, the ſalt fiſh harbour, and the Baſil Garden. At the timber-market are ſold new wooden houſes, which may be taken to pieces, and put together again where the purchaſer pleaſes. The fourth circle is called Semlanoigorod, i. e. a town ſurrounded with ramparts of earth. This circle incloſes the three preceding parts : and its ramparts include an area of eighteen or nineteen werſts. The entrance through theſe ramparts was formerly by thirty-four gates of timber, and two of ſtone. But of theſe only the two laſt are ſtanding at preſent. Over one of theſe gates is a mathematical ſchool and an obſervatory. This circle contains two convents, 103 pariſh churches, an imperial ſtable, a cloth manufacture, an artillery arſenal, a magazine for proviſions, and a mint. Round theſe principal parts of the city lie the vaſt ſuburbs belonging to it, in which are ten convents, and ſixty pariſh churches. Theſe all look like the villages in other parts of this country, except the German quarter, called Inaſemſka Sloboda, or Nemetſka Sloboda; which is both the largeſt and handſomeſt, and contains two Lutheran churches, a grammar ſchool, a Calviniſt church, and a Popiſh church. The whole number of the inhabitants of this vaſt city are ſuppoſed to be about 300,000, including ſtateſmen, noble families, and their ſervants, ſoldiers, merchants, mechanics, ſledge-drivers and carriers, prieſts, monks, and ſervants belonging to the churches, labourers, &c. The police of this city is on very laudable footing. Since the building of Peterſburg, and its being made the ſeat of the empire, Moſcow has greatly declined. In the year 1755, an univerſity, and two gymnaſia, or ſeminaries, were founded here. Moſcow has often ſuffered by fires; and, in the years 1737, 1748, and 1752, a conſiderable part of it was reduced to aſhes, eſpecially by the laſt fire, which conſumed above half the city, together with a noble diſpenſary mentioned above, and the czarina's ſtables. But the houſes have always been ſoon rebuilt after ſuch a calamity, as they are, for the moſt part, of very mean materials. The gardens hereabouts yield variety of fruit, and are famous for the tranſparent apple, called by the Ruſſians naliwi: 348 miles SE. Peterſburg, 600 ENE. Warſaw, and 700 NE. Cracow. Long. 55. 10. E. Ferro. Lat. 55. 42. N.

MOSKITO, or Muſkito, a name given to a tract of country in North America, bounded on the north and eaſt by the ſea, on the ſouth by Nicaragua, and on the weſt by Honduras. The Spaniards, indeed, reckon this a part of the province of Honduras, though they have no ſettlements in the Moſkito country. When the Spaniards firſt invaded this part of Mexico, they barbarouſly maſſacred moſt of the natives, whence proceeds the inſuperable averſion of ſuch of them as eſcaped into the inacceſſible mountains, againſt the Spaniards: and for that reaſon they have always readily joined with any Europeans that come upon their coaſt in enterpriſes againſt the Spaniards, particularly with the Engliſh, who frequently come among them. The Moſkito Indians being excellent markſmen, are employed by the Engliſh to ſtrike the manatee fiſh; and many of them ſail in Engliſh veſſels to Jamaica. When the duke of Albemarle was governor of the laſt-mentioned iſland, theſe people put themſelves under the protection of the crown of England, and their king received a commiſſion from him. Since which time, when their king dies, the next male heir goes to Jamaica, and receives a commiſſion accordingly; but before that he is not acknowledged as ſuch by his countrymen. Some time ago, offers were ſent from England to the Moſkito country, in order to have colonies ſettled among them.

MOZAMBIQUE, or Moſambico, a kingdom of Africa, on the eaſt coaſt, and in that part of the Indian Sea which paſſes between the continent and the iſland of Madagaſcar. It takes its name from the capital, ſituated on an iſland, chief of three iſlands which form a part of the kingdom. The celebrated Vaſco de Gama was the firſt European we know of, who diſcovered and came to an anchor near it, after his doubling the Cape of Good Hope: here it was that he informed himſelf about the main deſign of his voyage, the finding out a way into India by ſea, and concerning the people who lived on this coaſt; and here he was apprized of the vaſt commerce merce carried on by them from one kingdom and ſeaport to another. Among other particulars, he learned, that this iſland, ſubject to the king of Quiloa, was one of the moſt conſiderable marts on all the eaſtern coaſt; that it ſent ſhips into Arabia, and many other parts of the world, and was reſorted to by merchants from thence, who imported a variety of the richeſt commodities in great quantities. The iſland of Moſambico, though the largeſt of the three, is nevertheleſs very ſmall, not being above two bowſhots in breadth, and about ſix in length, about two miles from the continent. The bay is about three miles in circuit, ſo that the points of land on each ſide advance into the ſea. The other two, of St. George and St. James, lie on each ſide of it, facing the continent, in a direct line with it. Over againſt that of St. George, and about a mile from it, is the cape called by the Portugueſe Cabo Cetra, which is a peninſula, joined to the continent by a ſmall neck of land, covered with the ſea at high, but fordable at low water. The city of Moſambico is ſaid to be very handſome, the houſes well built, eſpecially the churches and convents, and the fort or caſtle is about a muſquet ſhot from the town. The fort is likewiſe one of the ſtrongeſt and beſt contrived the Portugueſe have on this coaſt. It is of a ſquare form, and each corner is flanked by a bulwark, with ſome pieces of artillery, which are a ſufficient fence both to the town and the haven. The ſoil of the iſland is nothing elſe but a white barren ſand, yet have the richer ſort found means to procure an artificial mould in ſeveral parts of the iſland, on which grow very fine citrons, oranges, ananas, figs, and other fruits, notwithſtanding their great ſcarcity of water; but the far greater part of their pulſe, roots, and other eſculents, are brought hither from the continent. It is far otherwiſe at land, where the ground is fat, and fertile in rice, millet, variety of roots, pulſe, fruits, and plants. They likewiſe breed vaſt quantities of cattle, large and ſmall, particularly ſheep with large tails. They ſwarm with wild beaſts of various kinds, as ſtags and wild boars, but eſpecially elephants, which are ſo fierce and deſtructive, that the inhabitants are obliged to kindle large fires round their ſown fields, to prevent their being devoured by them. Neither dare they ſtir far from their homes without lighted torches or firebrands in their hands to frighten them away; and even with theſe they have much ado to ſave themſelves from being deſtroyed, eſpecially by thoſe of the females which have young. The country hath likewiſe rich mines of gold, which is waſhed down by their rivers in great quantities, and makes a chief part of its commerce. Ivory, ebony, ſlaves, and cattle, are likewiſe exchanged for European goods, ſuch as little bells, knives, ſciſſars, and razors. Theſe laſt were ſo valued among them, that they would give fifteen cows for one of them. The Portugueſe, of whom they ſtand in awe, are the only Europeans admitted into ſome of their ſeaports, whence they export, beſides the commodities already mentioned, ſilver, copper, wax, rice, and other proviſions; but to all other Europeans they refuſe every kind of acceſs on any pretence. The kings of Portugal have ſpared no coſt to fortify and garriſon Mozambico, and to provide it with a noble hoſpital for the ſick, and a well ſtored magazine, with all neceſſaries for the ſhipping, though the charge of keeping them up often exceeds the revenues it affords. Long. 56. 40. MUHLHAUSEN, a town in alliance with Swiſſerland, ſituated in the Sundgau, on the river Ill, inſulated by the French department of the Upper Rhine. In the eleventh century, Muhlhauſen was erected into an imperial town, but, ſiding with the emperor Frederic II. though excommunicated by the pope, the biſhop of Straſzburg, in 1246, made himſelf maſter of it, and under his ſevere yoke it continued 15 years, till delivered by Adolphus, count of Habſburg. This prince, when afterwards created king of Germany, conferred ſeveral important privileges on it, among which, in 1275, he added an exemption from the judicature of any foreign court. Theſe ſeveral privileges were confirmed to it, and augmented by the ſucceeding kings and emperors of Germany, particularly by king Adolphus, and the emperor Charles IV. the former of whom enacted, that its imperial ſchultheiſz or judge ſhould be elected from among its own fifteen; and the latter not only permitted them to have a burgo-maſter of their own appointing, but alſo agreed, that the town ſhould for ever be inalienable from the empire. In 1515, it entered into a perpetual alliance with the Helvetic body, but, in 1580, this alliance was revoked by the popiſh cantons; the deputies they ſent thither on occaſion of the inteſtine commotions, not ſucceeding in their negociations; but the Calviniſts continued their union with it, and even admitted it into the community of rights, inſtituted in 1529. By virtue of this laſt union it is, indeed, an aſſociate town, but ſince its excluſion by the popiſh cantons, ſends no repreſentative to the general diet of the Helvetic body. Its regency conſiſts of the little and great council, the former of which is compoſed of three burgo-maſters, nine counſellors, and twelve maſters of companies: but the members of the latter, beſides thoſe 24 perſons, are alſo the ſix ſechſters, choſen out of each of the ſix companies into which the town is divided, with three burghers from each of the ſaid ſix companies, making in all 78 perſons. MULL, one of the Hebrides, or Weſtern Iſlands of Scotland, ſeparated from the county of Argyle, by a narrow paſſage, called the Sound of Mull. The ſhape is very irregular; towards the eaſt, the ſhape tends towards a round; on the weſt, hollow, and indented with conſiderable lochs and bays, which contain ſeveral ſmall iſlands. From north to ſouth, it is about 22 miles; from eaſt to weſt, at the ſouthern extremity, it is as much, but, towards the north, not more than eight; nor is any part of the iſland ſix miles from the ſea. The bays form ſome good harbours. On the iſland there are no villages, except Tobermorey, near the northern point, where a fiſhing ſtation has lately been erected. The ſoil is unfavourable for corn, being, for the moſt part, rocky and barren. The mountains, however, abound with ſprings, and are covered with cattle, of which a great number are annually exported. Theſe, with the fiſhings, and a conſiderable quantity of kelp, are the only articles of commerce. The ruins of ſeveral ancient caſtles are ſeen on this iſland. In 1588, on this coaſt, a ſhip of the line, belonging to the Spaniſh armada, was blown up; ſome ſay by accident, others, by the deſperate reſolution of a Scotchman. Long. 3. W. MUNDELLA, a town of Hindooſtan, in the country of Gurry Mundella: 40 miles SE. Gurrah, and 95 WNW. Ruttunpour.

MUNDEN, or Gemunden, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and principality of Calenberg, at the conflux of the Werra and the Fulda, where they join, to form the Weſer. It contains two Lutheran churches and an hoſpital. The Calviniſts perform their worſhip in an elegant building, in which is an organ; but this ſtructure is reckoned as a taxable houſe. In the town is a double garriſon: namely, one of four companies maintained by the town, and a regiment of the ſovereign's which quarters in barracks. The various goods brought hither by land and water from Heſſe, Thuringia, Saxony, Francfort, and Franconia, but more particularly from Nurenberg, Bavaria, &c. after a very ſhort ſtay here, are ſent down the Weſer, and what comes up it hither, is, for the moſt part, alſo forwarded in the above-mentioned countries. No foreigner, that is, no one who is not a freeman of Munden, is to trade beyond this town, but conſign his goods to a factor here; and whatever is brought in a veſſel, muſt, by virtue of the ſtaple right granted and confirmed to the town, be unladen and laden again. The Werra may be navigated by Munden and Heſſian veſſels, but the latter, on coming off Munden, are not to proceed, without a licence, and even then to have a Munden maſter, and pay a duty to the town, which being done, a licence in writing is granted. In 1626, it was beſieged and taken by ſtorm, by the imperialists, under count Tilly, by which ſtorm, excluſive of the number of townſmen who were killed, its loſs is eſtimated at 350,000 rix-dollars, and, on borrowing only 50 rix-dollars, of an inhabitant of Caſſel, to redeem one of their records out of the ſoldiers' hands, to raiſe ſo ſmall a ſum, the corporation was obliged to mortgage all its revenues. In 1757 and 1758, it was, for ſome time, poſſeſſed by the French: 13 miles SW. Gottingen, and 10 NNE. Caſſel.

MUNDEN, ſee Minden.

MUNDER, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and principality of Calenberg, on the Hammel. In the year 1483, this town was beſieged by the troops of Paderburn, Minden, Oſnabruck, and Lippe, united, but without ſucceſs. It ſuffered very much by the war which preceded the peace of Weſtphalia. Near the town is a ſalt-work: 18 miles ESE. Munden. Long. 26. 42. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 16. N.

MUNDERAR, a province of Aſia, in the northern parts of the country of Cabul.

MUNDERKINGEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, belonging to the houſe of Auſtria, ſituated on the Danube. This town ſuffered extremely during the long war in Germany. Within ſight of this place, in the year 1703, a battle was fought between a body of German horſe, amounting to 5000, under the command of the count de la Tour, and 3000 French horſe, under the command of M. de Legal, detached from the main army, encamped by the ſide of the Danube, for the defence of the dominions of the duke of Bavaria. The Imperialiſts had 1500 men killed and wounded; among the latter was prince Chriſtian of Hanover: 9 miles N. Buchau, and 36 SSW. Stuttgart.

MUNDSEE, a lake of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, near Angermunde, in the Ucker Mark of Brandenburg.

MUNICH, a city of Germany, in the circle of Bavaria, ſituated on the Iſer, the capital and reſidence of the elector. The ſtraight and broad ſtreets of this place, and the great number of fine buildings in it, both eccleſiaſtical and ſecular, render it one of the handſomeſt cities in all Germany, and even in Europe; and it is ſaid to contain 40,000 inhabitants. The palace here, which was firſt erected by the emperor Maximilian I. is an elegant ſtructure, containing four courts. The things the moſt worthy of notice in this palace, are, the large and beautiful Kaiſerſaal, a chapel of the Virgin Mary, with a rich treaſury in it; the antiquarium, or chamber of antiquities, in which are 200 marble ſtatues and buſts of Roman emperors, and ſome hundreds of other antiques, the greateſt part of which were brought from Italy; the chamber of rich curioſities; the muſæum, and the elector's library. In the year 1729, the palace, and particularly the chamber of rich curioſities here, ſuffered greatly by fire, and, in 1750, a whole wing of it was burned down. Towards the eaſt ſtands the elector's arſenal, and northward lie the park and pleaſure gardens, and near theſe is the Thurnierhaus, or large edifice for tournaments. In the largeſt market-place, ſtands a high marble pillar, with a braſs ſtatue of the Virgin Mary upon it, and two large fountains, and on the ſides is the town-houſe, in which the ſtates hold their meetings, together with ſeveral lofty houſes, ornamented with decorations of paintings on the front. The principal eccleſiaſtical buildings here, are the collegiate church, and ſeveral rich convents. In Munich, are manufactures of velvet, ſilk, wool, and tapeſtry. It is probable, that the ancient city of Campodunum, or Campidonum, ſtood in this neighbourhood. About the year 1175, duke Henry the Lion built the city of Munich on a ſpot belonging to the convent of Schoftlar. In 1327, it was greatly damaged by fire, and, in 1448, almoſt entirely deſtroyed. In 1632, it was taken by the Swedes, and, in 1704, 1742, and 1743, by the Auſtrians, who, in the laſt mentioned year, eſtabliſhed a commiſſion of regency at this place: 200 miles W. Vienna, and 29 SE. Augſburg. Long. 29. 15. E. Ferro. Lat. 48. 6. N.

MUNILLA, a town of Spain, in Old Caſtile: 8 miles S. Calahorra.

MUNKACS, a town of Hungary: the caſtle is almoſt impregnable, ſeated on a high and ſteep rock, in a ſpacious plain, the natural ſtrength of which is increaſed by art and labour. It is the capital of a lordſhip, formerly bearing the title of a duchy. Beneath it, on the river Latortza is a town, which is the reſidence of a Greek biſhop, united with the Roman church, and a convent of the order of St. Baſil. In 1688, after a blockade of three years, this famous caſtle ſurrendered to the Imperialiſts; count Tekely's lady, who had conducted this long defence, being carried to Vienna; and beſides the Tekely family, vaſt treaſures in money were found here. In 1703, this was the place of rendezvous to the Rakotzy party, but, by ſuppreſſion of that revolt, this caſtle eſcheated to the crown: 52 miles ESE. Caſkau, and 128 SSE. Cracow. Long. 39. 24. E. Ferro. Lat. 48. 15. N.

MUNSTER, a biſhopric of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia; bounded on the north by Eaſt Frieſeland and Oldenburg, on the eaſt by the biſhopric of Oſnabruck and counties of Diepholz, Tecklenburg, Lingen, and Ravenſberg, on the ſouth by the duchy of Weſtphalia, the counties of Mark and Recklinghauſen, and duchy of Cleves, and on the weſt by the United States and county of Bentheim. This country is level, with ſome agreeable heights, but no mountains. The extenſive heaths here ſerve for the breeding of cattle. In it are alſo fruitful plains, fine woods and turf, together with good quarries of ſtone, and rivers abounding in fiſh. The moſt remarkable are the Embs, the Lippe, the Vecht, and the Berkel. The Dummer Lake, which is one German mile in length, and half a one broad, lies between the biſhopric and the county of Diepholz, and in part belongs thereto. At the time of the reformation, the Lutheran doctrine found here, indeed, many adherents; but it was afterwards ſuppreſſed, and the exerciſe of the Lutheran religion, which had been permitted in the quarter of Embſland, in the years 1613 and 1614, was again put down. In the year 802, the emperor, Charlemagne, created Ludgern, of Frieſeland, firſt biſhop of Mimigernford, inſtead of which name was afterwards uſed that of Munſter. Biſhop Louis I. ſet this biſhopric free from the hereditary right of protection of the counts of Tecklenburg. Biſhop Hermann II. who governed in the 12th century, was, by the emperor Otto IV. made a prince of the empire. Biſhop Otto, a count of Bentheim, was the firſt prelate who was elected by the chapter, on whom the emperor, Frederick II. conferred a power for this purpoſe. Biſhop Louis II. a landgrave of Heſſe, was the firſt who was confirmed by the pope. Biſhop Chriſtopher Bernhard, a baron of Galen, who died in the year 1678, is celebrated as a great warrior. The Roman month is 832 florins, and the tax to the imperial chamber 434 rixdollars. The epiſcopal domains are more conſiderable than thoſe of Oſnabruck. The chapter maintains ſeven regiments. Munſter is the capital.

MUNSTER, a city of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and capital of the biſhopric of the ſame name, ſituated in a very fruitful and pleaſant ſpot, on the rivulet Aa, not far from the Embs. This town was at firſt called Mimigernford, Mimigard, &c. but in the 11th century, obtained the name of Munſter, from the collegiate church founded there by Charlemagne. Munſter is environed with double ditches and ramparts, and contains alſo in it a citadel, which is called the Brille, and was erected by biſhop Chriſtopher Bernhard, of Galen, in order to curb the town. Among others, is the pariſh church of St. Lambert, on the tower of which John of Leyden, king of the Anabaptiſts, together with both his princes, were hung up in iron baſkets. The town itſelf has undergone many calamities, among which that is in particular worthy of notice which it underwent in the time of the Anabaptiſts, in 1535 and 1536. In the year 1648, the famous peace concluded between Germany and France was ſettled here. But in the year 1660, this place refuſing to acknowledge ſubjection to the ſupreme power of the biſhop, it was beſieged, and ſurrendered in 1661. Biſhop Ferdinand wanted to erect an univerſity here, in 1631, and alſo obtained of the emperor, Ferdinand II. the confirmation thereof, but his deſign was never put in execution. This city is remarkable for a famous treaty of a general peace, which was ſettled in the year 1648. It is ſometimes called the treaty of Munſter, and ſometimes the treaty of Weſtphalia, becauſe the plenipotentiaries were divided, and laboured in two places at the ſame time: the Swedes at Oſnabruck, and the French at Munſter. Thus, from the two treaties of Munſter and Oſnabruck, they have given it the general term of the treaty of Weſtphalia: 65 miles NNE. Cologn. Long. 25. 6. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 49. N.—In the year 1759, this city was taken by the allies under general Imhoff.

MUNSTERBERG, a principality of Sileſia, environed by the principalities of Schweidnitz, Brieg and Neiſſe, and the county of Glatz. It is a good ſoil, and beſides flax, hemp, and wood, produces all ſorts of grain, and the neighbourhood of Munſterberg yields great quantities of hops. Here are likewiſe, large breeds of good horned cattle and ſheep. To the weſt and ſouth, or near the county of Glatz, it is very mountainous, the Bohemian chain ending in thoſe parts, and the Moravian chain of mountains beginning there. In this principality are three boroughs, and one market town. Its firſt princes were of the line of the dukes of Schweidnitz. At the partition between Boleſlaus I. and his brother, Henry V. or the Fat, ſons to Boleſlaus II. or Bald, the former obtained Munſterberg, and founded a diſtinct line there. His youngeſt ſon, Boleſlaus, reſided at the aforeſaid town, and, in 1341, mortgaged Frankenſtein to Charles, ſon to the king of Bohemia. He was ſucceeded by his ſon, Nicholas the Little, who made an abſolute ſale of Frankenſtein to the emperor, Charles IV. His ſucceſſor again was his ſon, Boleſlaus IV. to whoſe lands ſucceeded his two ſons, John and Henry. In 1653, the principality of Munſterburg, with the diſtrict of Frankenſtein, was by the emperor, Ferdinand, conferred as a fief on John Weichard, of Auerſberg, whoſe deſcendants ſtill enjoy it.

The kingdom of Murcia produces a great quantity of ſilk. The Moors when they conquered Spain, are ſaid to have brought thither the mulberry-tree, and to have taught the Spaniards the manner of cultivating it, as alſo how to prepare and weave the ſilk. The ſoil of Murcia is ſo favourable to this tree, that it more eaſily grows there than in any other part of Spain. The little kingdom of Murcia is ſaid to contain 355,500 mulberry-trees, and to produce annually 40,000 ounces of the grain of the ſilk-worm, the reſult of which is 250,000 pounds of ſilk. Every kind of fruit produced in Spain is found in Murcia; it furniſhes Caſtile, England, and France, with oranges, lemons, figs, &c. The mountains are covered with ſhrubs, reeds, and odoriferous and medicinal plants.

MURCIA, a city of Spain, and capital of a province of the ſame name. Murcia was only a village till the time of the Romans, who, delighted with its ſituation, dedicated it to Venus Myrtia. It was in the fields of Murcia that Scipio, returned from his conqueſt, celebrated the obſequies of his father and uncle. Murcia remained 616 years under the dominion of the Romans. It was taken, diſmantled, and ſacked, by the Goths, who poſſeſſed it 310 years. The Moors, in their turn, came to beſiege it, after having conquered Cordova, Malaga, Grenada, and Jaen; and the inhabitants went to meet and fight them. The two armies met in a plain, ſtill called Sangonera, on account of the bloody battle that followed, in which the Murcians behaved ſo gallantly, that moſt of them remained upon the field. In this extremity the governor of the city ordered all the women to be clad in armour, and drawn up on the rampart, whilſt, in the character of an ambaſſador, he went to the Mooriſh general to capitulate. The Moors, believing the city to be ſtill ſtrong and full of ſoldiers, granted him very advantageous terms; but what what was their aſtoniſhment, when, upon entering the gates, they found only an army of women! The ſame circumſtance is related of the taking of Orihuela. At length, after 527 years' poſſeſſion, the Moors loſt it, in 1241, to Don Ferdinand, ſon of Alphonſo the Wiſe, and it has ever ſince remained under the dominion of Spain. Murcia contains ſix pariſh churches endowed by Alphonſo the Wiſe, ten convents of monks and ſix nunneries. A late traveller ſays, this city, although conſiderable and well peopled, has not one inn; the only lodging to be had in it is as wretched as thoſe found upon moſt of the great roads of Spain, in the places called inns, generally kept by Gitanos, or Gipſies: 56 miles SW. MYSORE, a province of Hindooſtan, which takes its name from a town ſituated about ten miles ſouth from the river Cauvery, formerly governed by an Hindoo prince. What is called the kingdom of Myſore, includes, beſides the Myſore Proper, the countries of Bednore, Coimbetore, Canara, and Dindigul, with ſome others, the whole forming an extent near 500 miles, from north to ſouth, and near 300, where broadeſt, from eaſt to weſt, though in ſome places it is hardly 100, and, towards the ſouth, narrowed almoſt to a point. Myſore, on the north, is bounded by the countries of Viſiapour and Golconda, on the eaſt by the Carnatic, on the ſouth by Madura, Travancore, and Cochin, and, on the weſt, by the Indian Sea. On the death of the laſt Hindoo king, Hyder Ally, a ſoldier of fortune, declared himſelf regent, and impriſoned the young prince, who was to have ſucceeded his father. Hyder had riſen from a low rank, to the ſupreme command of the army. On a complaint that the Engliſh had not kept their treaties with him, he made an irruption into the Carnatic. The war continued with various ſucceſs, during the years 1767, 1768, and part of 1769 ; when Hyder, with a ſtrong detachment of choſen troops, chiefly horſe, giving the Britiſh army the ſlip, came within ſeven miles of Madraſs, and dictated a peace to the government of that place. Some years afterwards, hoſtilities were again commenced, and ſucceſſively renewed, till the death of Hyder Ally, and even after his death, by his ſon Tippoo ; till, in the year 1792, after ſeveral defeats, Tippoo was compelled to make peace, on the humiliating terms of ſurrendering great part of his dominions to the Engliſh and their friends, and the payment of thirty lacks of rupees ; and for the due performance of the articles of the treaty, two of the Sultan's eldeſt ſons were ſent as hoſtages to Lord Cornwallis, the commander of the Britiſh army. The groſs revenue of Tippoo has been ſtated at four crores of rupees, or as many millions ſterling. His military eſtabliſhment is very great, being no leſs than 72,800 regulars, including 740

Europeans, under the command of French officers ; beſides troops in the frontier garriſons, to the amount of 49,000. The remainder of his force conſiſts of irregulars of various deſcriptions, and amounts to 33,000, and upwards ; ſo that the whole force of Tippoo is reckoned at 155,000, of which near 73,000 are of a claſs much ſuperior to any troops that have ever been raiſed and diſciplined by a native of India.

NAARDEN, or Narden, a ſea-port town of Holland, ſituated at the ſouth part of the Zuyder See ; the capital of a ſmall country called Goyland, which includes Naarden, Muyden, and Weſep, with ſixteen villages. This city has undergone many misfortunes ; it has been ſacked, burned, pillaged, and, at length, drowned by the ſea. It was firſt built in 996, and the remains of the ancient town may ſometimes be diſcovered when the ſea retires to a more than ordinary diſtance. It was rebuilt in the year 1355, by William duke of Bavaria, who beſtowed on it many privileges. It is of very great importance, being ſituated at the head of the canals of the province of Holland, of which it is conſidered the key, particularly of Amſterdam ; the fortifications are handſome and regular, with double ditches. David de Burgoyne, biſhop of Utrecht, having obtained a great victory over the Hollanders, in 1481, ſurpriſed Naarden, by means of ſome ſoldiers diſguiſed like market women ; but, in a ſhort time afterwards, being beat in his turn, it was retaken ; five years after that, it was burned down by a ſudden fire. In the year 1572, Frederick de Toledo, ſon of the duke of Alva, took it from the Prince of Orange, and, to puniſh the inhabitants for their revolt, commanded them to aſſemble in the market-place, and after allowing them ſome time to prepare for death, he ordered them all to be maſſacred, without regard to age or ſex, contrary to his word given to the citizens : only a very few were ſpared, among whom was the learned Lambert Hortenſius ; all the houſes were burned, the walls were raſed, and the dead bodies left expoſed without burial for three weeks. The cities of Malines and Zutphen were ſerved the ſame, which ſo enraged the people againſt the Spaniards, that it produced a general revolt. In the year 1672, Naarden was taken by the French, but retaken by the Prince of Orange the following year : 14 miles N. Utrecht, and 11 E. Amſterdam. Long. 22. 37. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 20. N.

NABLOUS, a town of Aſia, and capital of a country, anciently called Samaria. This town, ſituated near Sichem, and on the ruins of the Neapolis of the Greeks, is the reſidence of a ſchieck, who farms the tribute, for which he is accountable to the pacha of Damaſcus, when he makes his circuit. The inhabitants are ſuch zealous Mahometans, as not, willingly, to ſuffer any Chriſtians among them. They are diſperſed in villages among the mountains, the ſoil of which is tolerably fertile, and produces a great deal of corn, cotton, olives, and ſome ſilk. Their diſtance from Damaſcus, and the difficulty of invading their country, by preſerving them to a certain degree from the oppreſſions of the government, enables them to live in more peace and happineſs, than is to be found elſewhere. They are at preſent even ſuppoſed the richeſt people in Syria ; which advantage they owe to their political conduct, during the late troubles in Galilee and Paleſtine ; when the tranquillity in which they lived, induced many perſons to take refuge there : 30 leagues SSW. NAIRN, a town of Scotland, and capital of a county of the ſame name. The town originally being ſituated in a different place, probably, from where it now ſtands, was defended by a caſtle. As far back as the time of king Malmcolm I. Buchanan informs us, that this caſtle was taken by the Danes, and that by them, the keepers thereof were cruelly uſed. Since that period, however, the ſea has made great encroachments, and the courſe of the river is greatly altered. Where the caſtle then ſtood, is entirely covered with water, and the river, which then run hard by the caſtle, now flows into the Murray Frith, nearly half an Engliſh mile to the eaſt of that place. The town is a royal burgh. In conjunction with Inverneſs, Forres, and Fortroſe, it returns a member to ſerve in parliament. At what period it was erected into a royal burgh, is uncertain. The number of ſouls in this town and pariſh is eſtimated at 2400. There are ſix fiſhing-boats in the town, and two in the country part of the pariſh, in each of which ſeven men are employed. The trade is not conſiderable; the chief exports ate fiſh, corn, and yarn: 13 miles ENE. Inverneſs. Long. 0. 36. W. Edinburgh. Lat. 57. 33. N.

NAIRN, a river of Scotland, which ſeparates the county of Murray from Inverneſs, croſſes Nairnſhire, and runs into the Frith of Murray near Nairn. The houſe of Calder ſtands on this river, where ſtrangers are ſhown the bed, in which tradition ſays, Duncan was murdered by Macbeth. The draw-bridge too, which is entire, exhibits a curious ſpecimen of antique architecture.

NAIRNSHIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded on the north by the Frith of Murray, on the eaſt and ſouth by the county of Murray, and on the weſt by the county of Inverneſs, and the Frith of Murray. NAMSLAW, a town of Sileſia, in tha principality of Breſlaw, with a ſtrong caſtle, ſituated among moraſſes, on the river Weyda. This town once belonged to the dukes of Breſlau, next to thoſe of Glogau, and afterwards to the dukes of Lignitz, till, in 1348, duke Wenceſlaus ſold it to the emperor Charles IV. who, in 1350, walled it in. The emperor, Wenceſlaus, included it under the ſame government with the principality of Breſlau. In 1619, it was deſtroyed by fire; and, in 1741, after a cannonade of three days, taken by the Pruſſians: 12 miles SE. Oels, and 23 ESE. Breſlaw.

NAMUR (County of), one of the ten catholic provinces of the Netherlands. The County of Namur conſtituted, in the tenth century, a part of the county of Lomme, as alſo of the county of Ainau; the former lay between the Meuſe and the Sambre, the latter extended from the Sambre to the other ſide of Gemblours, along the Ornau. The firſt count of Namur, concerning whom we have a certain knowledge, is Robert, ſon to Beringer, count of Lomme, to whom ſucceeded his ſon, Albrecht, who died in the year 998. In 1189, the emperor, Henry, declared Baldwin, count of Hainaut, who was ſiſter's ſon to Henry, count of Namur, and his appointed ſucceſſor, marggrave of the empire. Count John III. who had no legitimate children, ſold the county of Namur, in 1421, to Philip the Good, duke of Burgundy, for 132,000 crowns, and died in 1429.

NAMUR, a city of the Netherlands, and capital of the county of Namur, ſituated in a vally, at the conflux of the Meuſe and the Sambre; the greater part on the right ſide of the Sambre, between two hills. It is ſaid to take its name from an idol called Nam, ſuppoſed to be Neptune. The city was defended by a very ſtrong caſtle, ſituated on a ſharp rock on the oppoſite ſide of the Sambre; this caſtle was defended by Fort William, and many other very conſiderable forts, ſo as to make it ſuppoſed impregnable. In the year 1692, Louis XIV. being mortified at the defeat of his fleet off la Hogue, determined to lay ſiege to Namur, and having reviewed his army which amounted to 120,000 men, he inveſted it on both ſides the Sambre, with one half of his army, while the other covered the ſiege, under the command of the duke of Luxemburg. The prince of Brabançon commanded the garriſon, which conſiſted of 9000 men. The place was well ſupplied, and the governor knew that king William would make ſtrong efforts for its relief: notwithſtanding which the aſſailants carried on their attacks with ſuch vigour, that, in ſeven days after the trenches were opened, the town capitulated, and the garriſon retired into the citadel. King William being joined by the troops of Brandenburg and Liege, advanced to the Mehaigne, at the head of 100,000 effective men, and encamped within cannon-ſhot of Luxemburg's army, which lay on the other ſide of the river. That general, however, had taken ſuch precautions, that the king of England could not interrupt the ſiege, nor attack the French lines, without great diſadvantage. The beſiegers, encouraged by the preſence of their monarch, and aſſiſted by Vauban, their engineer, repeated their attacks with ſuch impetuoſity, that the fort of Coehorn was ſurrendered after an obſtinate defence, in which Coehorn himſelf had been dangerouſly wounded. It was a noble ſpectacle to behold the two greateſt engineers Europe had ever bred, Vauban and Coehorn, exhauſt the whole ſcience of attack and defence. Several ſallies and aſſaults were made; the beſieged performed wonders, but the fortune of the beſiegers prevailed, and the citadel ſurrendered, in ſight of king William's army. Namur remained in the poſſeſſion of the French, till the year 1695, when king William was determined, if poſſible, to retake it. On the 11th of July, the trenches were opened, and the next day the batteries began to play with incredible fury, and the garriſon defended the place with equal ſpirit and perſeverance. On the 18th, major-general Ramſay and the lord Cutts, at the head of five battalions Engliſh, Scots, and Dutch, attacked the enemy's advanced works on the right of the counterſcarp. They were ſuſtained by ſix Engliſh battalions, commanded by brigadier-general Fitzpatrick, while eight foreign regiments, with 9000 pioneers, advanced on the left, under major-general Saliſch. The aſſault was deſperate and bloody, the enemy maintaining their ground for two hours with undaunted courage; but, at laſt they were obliged to give way, and were purſued to the very gates of the town, though not before they had killed or wounded 1200 of the confederate army. The king was ſo well pleaſed with the behaviour of the Britiſh troops, that, during the action, he laid his hand upon the ſhoulder of the elector of Bavaria, and exclaimed with emotion, "See, my brave Engliſh!" Count Guiſcard, the governor, capitulated for the town on the 4th of Auguſt; and the French retired into the citadel, againſt which twelve batteries played upon the 13th. On the firſt day of September, the beſieged having obtained a ceſſation of arms, that their dead might be buried, the comte de Guiſcard appearing on the breach, deſired to ſpeak with the elector of Bavaria, his highneſs immediately mounting the breach, the French governor offered to ſurrender the fort of Coehorn, but was given to underſtand, if he meant to capitulate, he muſt treat for the whole. This reply being communicated to Boufflers, he agreed to the propoſal: the ceſſation was prolonged, and that very evening the capitulation was finiſhed. It was obſerved, that the French king had ſo much confidence in the ſtrength of this place, that he cauſed this inſcription to be put up over one of the gates:

Reddi, non vinci poteſt.

It may be ſurrendered, but cannot be conquered.

After the death of Charles II. of Spain, the French ſeized Namur, with the reſt of the Netherlands. In the year 1704, the Dutch army, under general Ouwerkercke, or Overkirk, bombarded it, from the 26th, of July, to the 29th, and deſtroyed great part of the city; but the French kept poſſeſſion of it, till the treaty of Utrecht, when the comté, town, and caſtle, were given up to the States General, to ſerve as a barrier againſt France; the elector of Bavaria being to enjoy the ſovereignty and revenues, and the town to contribute its quota to the maintenance of the Dutch troops and fortifications. In the year 1746, after the French had taken Huy, and cut off the communication of the allies with Maeſtricht, prince Charles of Lorrain abandoned the defence of Namur, and it was immediately inveſted by the enemy. The trenches were opened on the 2d day of September, and the garriſon, conſiſting of 7000 Auſtrians, defended themſelves with equal ſkill and reſolution; but the cannonading and bombardment were ſo terrible, that, in a few days, the place was converted into a heap of rubbiſh; and on the 23d day of the month, the French monarch took poſſeſſion of this ſtrong fortreſs, which had formerly ſuſtained ſuch dreadful attacks. By the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, it was ceded to the emperor, and, ſince that time, the fortifications have been demoliſhed, except the citadel, of which general Valence, with a detachment of the French army, made himſelf maſter, the ſecond of December, 1792. The French, however, evacuated it the following year. In the year 1794, after the defeat of general Clairfait, near Louvain, on the 15th of July, the Netherlands were found untenable by the allies. It was, at firſt, the intention of the commanders of the combined armies, to defend Namur, and to form a line of defence from that city, to Antwerp; but the ſucceſſes of the republicans, and their rapid movements, totally diſconcerted this plan. Namur was abandoned by general Beaulieu, on the night of the ſixteenth, leaving behind him only 200 men, who ſurrendered both the city and citadel on the firſt ſummons. A large quantity of artillery was found at Namur. On the 20th, the keys of the city were preſented at the bar of the national convention. Namur is the ſee of a biſhop, erected in the year 1559, by pope Paul IV. It had, before the reformation begun by the late emperor, Joſeph, four abbies of Benedictines, 14 of Ciſtertians, one of the order of Premontré, one abby, and two priories of canons regular, ſeven chapters of canons, three chapters of noble canoneſſes, with a great number of other religious houſes both for men and women, and many hoſpitals: 25 miles SW. NAN-KING, or Kiang-nin, a city of China, capital of the province of Kiang-nan, ſaid to have been formerly one of the moſt beautiful and flouriſhing cities in the world. When the Chineſe ſpeak of its extent, they ſay, if two horſemen ſhould go out in the morning by the ſame gate, and ride round it on full ſpeed, taking different directions, they would not meet before night. This account is evidently exaggerated: but it is certain, that Nan-king ſurpaſſes in extent all the other cities of China. We are aſſured, that its walls are five leagues and a half in circumference. This city is ſituated at the diſtance of a league from the river Yang-tſe-kiang; it is of an irregular figure; the mountains which are within its circumference, having prevented its being built on a regular plan. It was formerly the imperial city; for this reaſon, it was called Nan-king, which ſignifies, The Southern Court; but ſince the ſix grand tribunals have been transferred from hence to Pe-king, it is called Kiang-ning, in all the public acts. Nan-king has loſt much of its ancient ſplendour; it had formerly a magnificent palace, no veſtige of which is now to be ſeen; an obſervatory, at preſent neglected, temples, tombs of the emperors, and other ſuperb monuments, of which nothing remains but the remembrance. A third of the city is deſerted, but the reſt is well inhabited. Some quarters of it are extremely populous and full of buſineſs. The ſtreets are not ſo broad as thoſe of Pe-king, they are, however, very beautiful, well paved, and bordered with rich ſhops. Here are no public edifices correſponding to the reputation of ſo celebrated a city, excepting its gates, which are very beautiful, and ſome temples; among which is the famous porcelain tower. It is two hundred feet high, and divided into nine ſtories, by plain boards within and without, by cornices and ſmall projections covered with green-varniſhed tiles. There is an aſcent of forty ſteps to the firſt ſtory; between each of the others, there are twenty-one: 500 miles SSE. Peking. Long. 136. 10. E. Ferro. Lat. 32. 4. N.

NANT, a town of France, in the department of the Aveiron, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Milhau: 3½ leagues SE. Milhau, and 6 N. Lodeve.

NAN-TA-KI, a town of China, near the weſt coaſt of the iſland of Formoſa. Long. 138. 6. E. Ferro Lat. 24. 50. N.

NAN-TAN, a town of China, of the ſecond rank, in the province of Quang-ſi: 1037 miles SSW. Peking. Long. 125. E. Ferro. Lat. 25. N.

NAN-TCHANG, a city of China, of the firſt rank, and capital of the province of Kiang-ſi. This city has no trade but that of porcelain, which is made in the neighbourhood of Jao-tcheou. It is the reſidence of a viceroy, and comprehends in its diſtrict, eight towns, ſeven of which are of the third claſs, and only one of the ſecond. So much of the country is cultivated, that the paſtures left are ſcarcely ſufficient for the flocks: 695 miles S. Peking. Long. 133. 16. E. Ferro Lat. 28. 36. N.

NAN-TCHANG, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Hou-quang: 27 miles SW. Siang-yang.

NAN-TCHOUEN, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Se-tchuen: 40 miles NNW. Tchi-ngan.

NAN-TERRE, a town of France, in the department of Paris, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of St. Denis: 5 miles W. Paris.

NANTES, a city of France, and capital of the department of the Lower Loire, heretofore capital of a diſtrict, called Nantois, in Bretagne. It is ſituated on the Loire, and one of the greateſt trading cities in the kingdom; being pretty large, populous, well ſituated, and containing four ſuburbs. Before the revolution, it was the ſee of a biſhop, the ſeat of an intendancy, a collection, a chamber of accounts, a board of finances, a mint office, a conntry-court, a bailiwick, a prévôté, an admiralty, a foreſt-court, and a conſulate: excluſive of the cathedral, and a collegiate church, in it were eleven pariſh-churches, fourteen convents, two hoſpitals, one college, and an univerſity, founded about the year 1460, a ſociety of agriculture and arts, a ſchool of anatomy and ſurgery, and a large rope manufacture. This city carries on a very large trade to the French colonies, to America, to Spain, Portugal, and other parts, though ſhips of burden can come no farther up the Loire than to Paimboeuf, a market town where the cargoes are put into ſmaller veſſels, and carried to Nantes. The city is famous in hiſtory, for the edict iſſued here in the year 1598, by Henry the Great, for granting to the proteſtants the public exerciſe of their religion; but this edict Louis XIV. revoked, in 1685. The number of inhabitants is eſtimated at 80,000: 42 poſts N. Bourdeaux, and 47 SW. Paris. Long. 17. 7. E. Ferro. Lat. 47. 13. N.

NANTEUIL, a town of France, in the department of the Aiſne, between Meaux and Château-Thierry.

NANTEUIL, a town of France, in the department of the Marne: 2 leagues N. Epernay.

NAN-TSIN, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Fokien : 17½ miles NE. Tchang-tcheou.

NANTUA, a town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Ain : 12 leagues W. Geneva, and 6 E. Bourg-en-Breſſe. Long. 23. 16. E. Ferro. Lat. 46. 9. N.

NANTUCKET, an iſland of North America, ſituated in the Atlantic, near the coaſt of the Maſſachuſetts, about ten miles E. from Martha's vineyard; it contains about 23,000 acres. The iſland is low, ſandy, and unproductive. The inhabitants chiefly ſubſiſt by fiſhing. Long. 70. W. Greenwich. Lat. 41. 15. N.

NANTZ, a town of France, in the department of the Aveiron : 4 leagues E. Milhau.

NANUI, a town of Perſia, in the province of Irac : 18 leagues NE. Iſpahan.

NAN-YANG, a city of China, of the firſt rank, in the province of Ho-nan. The city is ſituated on the banks of a ſmall river, but neither large, rich, nor populous, and is ſurrounded with mountains ; in ſome of which lapis lazuli is found. The juriſdiction is great, and comprehends two towns of the ſecond order, and ſix of the third : 462 miles SSW. Peking. Long. 130. E. Ferro. Lat. 33. 6. N.

NAN-YONG, a city of China, of the firſt rank, in the province of Quang-tong. This is a large trading city, ſeated at the foot of a mountain, which ſeparates the province of Quang-tong from that of Kiang-ſi, from which run two great rivers, one towards the ſouth, and the other towards the north ; this city has but two towns, of the third order, under its juriſdiction : 902 miles S. Peking. Long. 131. 18. E. Ferro. Lat. 25. 10. N.

NAOURS, a town of France, in the department of the Somme, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Doulens : 3 leagues N. Amiens.

NAPATA, a town of Africa, in the country of Nubia, near the eaſt coaſt of the Nile : 210 miles ESE. Dungala, and 160 WNW. Suakem.

NAPAUL, a country or kingdom of Aſia, tributary to Thibet, between the north-weſt part of Bengal and the Himmaleh mountains, to the north of Mocaumpour.

NAPLES, a country of Italy, bounded on the north-weſt by the province of Campagna di Roma, Umbria, and Marquiſate of Ancona ; on the north-eaſt by the Adriatic, and every where elſe by the Mediterranean. The form has generally been likened to the lower part of a leg and foot, the length, from the moſt northerly to the moſt ſoutherly points, upwards of 300 miles, the breadth is various, in ſome places 90 miles, in others conſiderably leſs ; in ſome parts of Calabria ſcarcely 30. This country is extremely hot, which diſorders foreigners, unleſs they take great care of themſelves. In the lower part of the kingdom, little of winter is felt, and in the plains it is very extraordinary to ſee ice, or even ſnow. The ſnow that ſometimes falls in the mountainous parts, is gathered and kept for cooling liquors in ſummer-time, inſtead of ice. Even ſo early as April, the ſun darts a very great heat ; but the nights are cold. The fertility of the ſoil of this country is very extraordinary, being productive to an exuberance of all kind of grain, and the fineſt fruits and culinary vegetables, which may be cultivated and raiſed in any time of the year. Oil, wines, rice, and flax, are equal to the fineſt of other countries. Calabria affords great quantities of manna, and, both there, and in other parts of the kingdom, ſaffron grows, and is deemed as good as that brought from the Eaſt. Here, alſo, are alum, vitriol, ſulphur, rock cryſtal, marble quarries, and a variety of minerals. Glaſs works make a very beneficial branch of trade, as do alſo the Neapolitan horſes, which are much eſteemed. The wool of the ſheep is fine and good, and ſilk is exported to a conſiderable value. Of the filaments, or a kind of hair, or wool, of an olive green, growing on ſome ſhell-fiſh (which are alſo to be met with at Malta, Corſica, Sardinia, and in the Gulf of Venice) are made waiſtcoats, caps, ſtockings, and gloves, much warmer than wool, and, though not ſo fine and ſoft as ſilk, yet always retaining a peculiar gloſs. Among the natural curioſities of this country, the Phrygian ſtone, or the pietra fungifera, as it is called, may alſo be claſſed. It has neither the hardneſs of ſtone, nor the properties of earth, but conſiſts of an indurated mixture of earth, rotten beech-wood, and fibres of ſeveral plants. From this ſtone, laid in a ſhady and damp place, muſhrooms grow in a few days. The ſeed lies in the ſubſtance of the ſtone, and is diſtinguiſhable only by a good microſcope, from duſt. The Appennine mountains extend throughout the whole length of the country, and terminate at the Straits of Sicily. Earthquakes, no ſmall detriment to this kingdom, are chiefly felt in its lower parts, where are ſeen, with a kind of conſternation, the ruins of many celebrated cities, of which now ſcarcely the name is preſerved. Another inconveniency, but common to all Italy, are the ſwarms of lizards, whereof great numbers of the green kind are every where to be met with, but rather troubleſome than hurtful, as they creep up and down the walls, and if a door or window be left open, make their way into the chambers. A much greater nuiſance are the ſcorpions, but the tarantulas are moſt talked of. Theſe are a ſpecies of ſpiders, ſo called from the city of Tarento, in which diſtrict they are in greater number, and alſo more venomous, than elſewhere ; but the poiſon of them is a matter of doubt. The Jews who came here about the year 1200, but in 1540 were expelled, in the year 1740 obtained here and in Sicily exemptions and privileges beyond what they enjoyed in any part for many centuries paſt. The Neapolitan nobility are very numerous, as may appear by a liſt of the king's vaſſals, taken ſeveral years ago ; at which time they amounted to 935. In this kingdom are only two ſtates, conſiſting of nobles and commons, the clergy not making a diſtinct claſs, but being intermingled with the other two. The parliament, or general aſſembly of the ſtates, is ſummoned every two years, to meet at the capital, where the ſeſſions are held in the Minorite convent, near St. Laurence's church. The chief buſineſs is to deliberate on the cuſtomary free-gift to the king, which has often amounted to upwards of 1,500,000 crowns. The Neapolitans have always reſolutely oppoſed the introducing of the inquiſition, beſides which, no papal mandates, or bulls, can be acknowledged and made public, without the king's exequatur. The number of monaſteries and convents is aſtoniſhing, and the clergy may be ſaid to be all wealthy, but the laity poor. In this kingdom are 21 archbiſhoprics and 123 biſhoprics. The ſilk, woollen, and other manufactures, together with the improvement of arts, owe their firſt eſtabliſhment to Ferdinand of Aragon, who patronized them in a very liberal manner. Theſe manufactures, joined to the native produce, are a ſource of conſiderable trade to this kingdom. The provinces of which the kingdom of Naples conſiſts, were formerly a part of the dominions of the Roman republic, and afterwards of the emperors. During the long and bloody war for his ſucceſſion, count Daun, in the year 1707, conquered this kingdom for Charles III. afterwards emperor, by the title of Charles VI. who, in 1720, alſo acquired Sicily. In the year 1734, the Spaniards made themſelves maſters of both kingdoms, for the Infant Don Carlos : and, in 1736, the emperor, by a formal inſtrument, ceded the kingdoms of Naples and Sicily to him and his heirs, male, and female ; and, in default thereof, to his younger brothers and ſiſters. The title of king of both Sicilies, which has lately been revived, was firſt uſed in the 12th century, when Roger II. earl of Sicily, was alſo king of Naples. The king, in acknowledgment of the pope's feudal right, ſends every year to him a white palfrey, and a purſe of 6000 ducats. The king's eldeſt ſon is ſtyled prince of Calabria. The diviſion of the kingdom into twelve provinces, called guiſtizierati, juriſdictions, which ſtill ſubſiſts, is commonly attributed to the emperor Frederick II. Theſe provinces are Terra di Lavora, Principato Citra, Principato Ultra, Capitinata, Moliſe, Abruzzo Citra, Abruzzo Ultra, Bari, Otranto, Baſilicata, Calabria Citra, and Calabria Ultra.

NAPLES, a city of Italy, and capital of the kingdom of Naples, ſituated in the country of Lavora, partly on a mountain, and partly towards the ſea. It is large, its walls being nine Italian miles round ; but, including the ſuburbs, the entire circumference cannot be leſs than 18 or 20 Italian miles. Moſt of the ſtreets are admirably well paved, and that of the greateſt length and breadth, and in every reſpect the handſomeſt, is the Strada di Toledo. The houſes, in general, are lofty, and of ſtone, with paved flat roofs, and a baluſtrade on them. The great number of ſtalls whereon eatables are expoſed to ſale, and of balconies with lattice windows, are a great impediment to the ſtreets' appearing to advantage ; beſides, they are left deſtitute of the conveniency and ornament of being illuminated at night. This city does not, indeed, rival either Rome or Genoa in ſtately palaces, yet it may juſtly boaſt of very fine ones, as alſo of the delightful embelliſhment of a conſiderable number of fountains, though the water in moſt of them is but indifferent. Water is alſo conveyed to the city from the foot of Mount Veſuvius, by a very grand aqueduct. Here are ſwarms of princes, dukes, marquiſes, and other nobility, to whom are appropriated five large piazzas. The commonalty have alſo their peculiar piazza. Each of theſe ſix piazzas chooſes its deputies, who ſuperintend the police of the city, and hold a court for the examination of ſuch public concerns as fall under their cognizance. Of all the palaces, that of the king is not only the moſt auguſt, but alſo of the neweſt architecture. The monaſteries and convents, of both ſexes, are computed at 149, beſides which, are 34 houſes for poor boys, girls, and women ; 11 hoſpitals, 5 ſeminaries for eccleſiaſtics, 4 capital churches, 32 pariſh churches, 70 other churches and chapels, and upwards of 130 oratories or chapels of religious fraternities. Moſt of the churches are deficient in good paintings and a fine front, and their marble monuments are not of thoſe magnificent large dimenſions which ſtrike the eye with ſuch ſurpriſe as the far greater part do in Rome ; but every thing elſe, in beauty and richneſs, ſurpaſſes all of the kind in other Catholic countries ; the value of the jewels and altar utenſils being alone eſtimated at ſeveral millions of dollars. Naples is the ſee of an archbiſhop, whoſe cathedral, called Il Duomo, is a fine Gothic building. The greateſt curioſity in it is the magnificent chapel, called Il Teſoro, where St. Januarius's head, and ſome of his blood, are kept; but his body lies under the altar. This dried blood is preſerved in two ſmall glaſs or cryſtal vials, and every year, on the firſt Sunday in May, is with great ſolemnity brought near, or made to touch the head of St. Januarius, when, by a ſuppoſed miracle, it liquifies, and thereby is imagined to be a happy preſage both to the country and government; but if the blood retains its dryneſs, the people are ſtruck with terror, and make diſmal lamentations. For the defence of the city, and at the ſame time to keep it in ſubjection, are five caſtles, but, according to the old method, conſiſting only of very ſtrong walls. The Caſtello Nuovo has a communication by a covered way with the king's palace, and on one ſide is contiguous to the ſea. Its ſubterraneous works and mines are admirable. At its entrance ſtands a triumphal arch, of very curious ſculpture. The arſenal is ſaid to contain complete ſets of arms for 50,000 men. The Caſtello del Uovo, ſo called from its oval figure, is of ſome ſtrength, and ſtands on a rock, in the ſea. St. Elmo, or St. Eramo, is ſituated on a mountain, towards the weſt, and reſembles a ſtar of ſix rays, which are hewn out of a rock; its ſubterraneous works are wide, lofty, and bomb-proof. It has eight reſervoirs for water. The harbour is ſpacious, and for its greater ſecurity has a canal and a mole near 500 paces in length; but is by far leſs commodious and ſecure than that of Gaeta, eſpecially in a hard gale at ſouth-weſt. The city has good ſilk manufactures, and no inconſiderable trade, for the advancement of which the Jews were re-admitted in the year 1740. Its exports are ſilk and ſilk-ſtuffs, oil, ſulphur, manna, roſemary, anniſeed, reſin, tartar, figs, ſoap, eſſences, ſilk waiſtcoats, &c. Since the canal was made by Don Pedro de Toledo, viceroy under Charles V. for draining the ſea water out of the adjacent fens, the air is much altered for the better. This city is of Greek origin, but the foundation of the grandeur to which it has gradually riſen was laid by the emperor Frederick II. In the 13th century, Charles I. of Anjou, embelliſhed it with a new palace, ſome ſtately churches and convents, and made it his uſual place of reſidence. In the year 1300, it was enlarged by Charles II. in 1425, by queen Joanna II. and afterwards by king Ferdinand; but by none more than the public ſpirited Don Pedro de Toledo, to whom it is ſignally obliged for having made it twice as large, beſides much handſomer and ſtronger, and even more healthy. This city, till a very few years ſince, had neither watchmen nor lamps; but of late years, darkneſs has been diſpelled in many ſtreets, by the piety of father Rocco, a Dominican, who has perſuaded the people to ſubſcribe oil for lamps, to burn before images; he fixes them up in the moſt convenient places, and thus turns their devotion to public account. Proviſions are plentiful, and cheap: poultry, game, and fiſh, are abundant; fruit and vegetables are to be had all winter in ſo favourable a climate. The wants of nature are ſo eaſily ſatisfied here, that the lower claſs of people work but little; their great pleaſure is, to baſk in the ſun, and do nothing. Many of the ſtreets are more crowded than even thoſe of London or Paris: the people doing little or nothing, and having no public walks or gardens to reſort to. In the midſt of all this idleneſs, fewer riots or outrages happen than might be expected. This is owing partly to the national character of the Italians; and partly to the common people here being univerſally ſober. Their great luxury is iced water; and nothing would be ſo likely to raiſe a mutiny in Naples as a ſcarcity of ice. The king grants the monopoly of this commodity to certain perſons, who are obliged to furniſh the city all the year, at a certain price, which is about three farthings a pound. There is not, perhaps, a city in Europe, in which ſo few of the inhabitants contribute to the wealth of the community, by uſeful or productive labour, as Naples. The number of nobility, prieſts, monks, lawyers, muſicians, footmen, and lazzaronis, ſurpaſſes all reaſonable proportion. The religious are ſaid to be about 10,000, the lawyers 8000, and the lazzaronis 40,000. The whole number of inhabitants is eſtimated at 350,000; 100 miles SE. Rome. Long. 31.48. E. Ferro. Lat. 40. 52. N.

NAPLOUSE, ſee Nablous.

NAPO, a town of South America, in the audience of Quito, ſituated on a river of the ſame name, which runs into the river of the Amazons: 200 miles SE. Quito.

NAPOLI DI ROMANIA, anciently Nauplia, a ſea-port town of European Turkey, in the Morea, ſituated on a peninſula, in a bay of the Mediterranean, called, from the town, the Gulf of Napoli. The harbour is good and ſpacious, but the entrance narrow, and defended by a ſtrong caſtle. It is the ſee of a Greek archbiſhop. The inhabitants are Turks, Jews and Chriſtians, who all follow their devotions as they like, without controul. This town was taken by the Turks, in the year 1715: 8 miles S. Argos, 28 S. Corinth, and 60 S. Livadia. Long. 40. 37. E. Ferro. Lat. 37. 39. N.

NAPOLI DI MALVASIA, ſee Malvaſia.

NAR, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Maſovia: 80 miles E. Warſaw.

NARA, a town of Japan, in the iſland of Niphon: 8 leagues from Meaco.

NARBIMSKOI, a lake of Ruſſia, about 36 miles in circumference: 220 miles NNE. Turuchanſk.

NARBONNE, a town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Aude, ſituated on a canal, which communicates with the Aude. Before the revolution, it was the ſee of an archbiſhop, the ſeat of an admiralty, and reſidence of a governor: it contained two collegiate churches, beſides the cathedral, a college, two ſeminaries, thirteen convents, and ſeveral hoſpitals. It was formerly the capital of a vicomté, whoſe lords were powerful and ſtrongly fortified, but at preſent a wall, flanked with baſtions, is its only defence. It is not populous in proportion to its extent, neither is it a rich or commercial town. The number of inhabitants is about 10,000: 3 poſts SW. Beziers, and 104½ S. Paris. Long. 20. 40. E. Ferro. Lat. 43. 11. N.

NARBOROUGH ISLAND, a ſmall iſland in the South Pacific Ocean, near the coaſt of Chili; diſcovered by ſir John Narborough. It affords wood and water, but is without inhabitants. Long. 76. 12. W. Greenwich. Lat. 45. 12. S.

NAREA, a country of Africa, ſituated in the ſouthern part of Abyſſinia, and ſubject to that empire, but governed by its own princes.

NARENTA, a town of Venetian Dalmatia, on a river of the ſame name, formerly the capital of Dalmatia, and one of its principal forteſſes. It was governed by a Roman pro-conſul and council, and under its juriſdiction were comprehended many diſtant places. In ſucceeding times, the Sclavonians ſeated themſelves here, and, under the title of Narentani, moleſted the navigation of theſe parts till the year 987, when the Venetians made themſelves maſters of the town. They had their own chiefs for a long time, but in the year 1479, became ſubject to the Turkiſh yoke. Of the ancient town, not the leaſt trace is ſaid to remain, but in this neighbourhood is another, called Narenza, from the river of the ſame name, which the Venetians fortified, but diſmantled again, in the year 1716: 68 miles SE. Spalatro, and 36 NNW. Raguſa. Long. 35. 50. E. Ferro. Lat. 43. 34. N.

NAREW, a river of Poland, which riſes on the borders of Lithuania, and runs into the Bug, near Serolzeck, in Maſovia.

NARVA, a ſea-port town of Ruſſia, in the government of Revel, on a river of the ſame name, near the Gulf of Finland, and on the borders of the government of Peterſburg, ſuppoſed to have been built by the governor of Eſthonia, in the year 1224; on the river is a cataract, of about 20 feet, on which account goods muſt be carried by land during that ſpace. The principal exports are hemp, flax, timber, and corn; and the principal imports are ſalt, tobacco, wine, ſalted herrings, ſpices, tea, ſugar, and grocery in general. Near Narva is the ſpot celebrated for the victory which Charles XII. in the nineteenth year of his age, gained over the Ruſſian army, in 1700. Six thouſand Ruſſians, including thoſe who were drowned in attempting to paſs the Narva, fell in this engagement; but the conſequences were ſtill more fatal to the Ruſſian arms, as the whole artillery was loſt, and the greateſt part of the infantry ſurrendered to the conqueror. It then belonged to Sweden; but about five years after, it was taken by the Ruſſians, by ſtorm, under the command of Peter the Great, who gave a great proof of his humanity: the Ruſſian ſoldiers were beginning to pillage, and to commit all the diſorders uſual when a town is taken by ſtorm; Peter traverſed the ſtreets on horſeback, with his drawn ſword in his hand, reſtrained his troops from pillage, killed two who refuſed to deſiſt, placed guards at the doors of the principal houſes, and before the churches, and repaired to the Hôtel de Ville, where the magiſtrates, and principal citizens had taken refuge, and throwing his ſword upon the table, exclaimed, "It is not ſtained with the blood of the natives, but with that of my own ſoldiers, whom I killed in order to ſave your lives:" 100 miles E. Revel, and 68 SW. Peterſburg. Long. 45. 48. E. Ferro. Lat. 59. 16. N.

NARVA, or Narova, a river of Ruſſia, which runs from the Tchudſkoi Lake, to the Gulf of Finland, below Narva.

NASSAU, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, and county of Naſſau Dietz, on the Lahn, the church of which is uſed in common, both by the Lutherans and Calviniſts. On the other ſide of the river, facing the town, and on a high mountain, formerly ſtood Naſſauberg, a place of very great antiquity, and the original houſe of the Naſſau family, but now a fief of Treves: 22 miles NW. Mentz, and 12 SE. Coblentz.

NASSAU, a principality of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, ſituated in the Weterau, about forty-eight miles in length, and twenty-eight in breadth. Though it is for the moſt part woody and mountainous, yet it is not without fine arable and meadow lands. The houſe of Naſſau is deſcended from Otho, lord of Lamenberg, who lived in the 10th century. The founder of the preſent princes of Naſſau was count Henry I. ſurnamed the Wealthy, who equally left to his two ſons, Walram and Otho I. the whole county of Naſſau, with its feudal, patrimonial, and hereditary lands. In a compact of partition, made in the year 1255, they held the patrimonial houſe and prefecturate of Naſſau, with other family privileges, in an indiviſible community; but the other part of the county they divided. Weilburg, Wiſbaden, and Idſtein, became Walram's part; and Otho I. had Siegen, Dillenburg, Herborn, Beilſtein, Hadamar, and Ems, all which gave diſtinctive titles to each family. The preſent reigning princes are Naſſau Weilburg, Naſſau Saarbruck Uſingen, and Naſſau Saarbruck Saarbruck; all the branches are named from the principal towns in the ſeveral diſtricts.

NASSAU DIETZ. This country is ſituated according to Buſching, in the circle of the Upper Rhine; Berenger places it in the circle of Weſtphalia; it lies on the river Lahn, and was formerly called the Golden County, on account of its fertility. It is a fief of Treves, having been granted to the archbiſhop of that city by the emperor Frederick III. in ſo abſolute a manner, that the poſſeſſor of this county was to hold it as a fief of the elector of Treves, as it had before been held of the emperor and empire. This county conſtitutes a part of the ſtyle of the landgraves of Heſſe; but whether they have any ſhare at all in it, or whether Ems, Reichenberg, Nahſtede, Hohenſtein, and other places, in reality belong to it, is ſtill matter of debate. Dietz is the capital.

NAVARRE, a province of Spain, and anciently a kingdom : bounded on the north-eaſt by France, on the eaſt by Aragon, on the ſouth by Old Caſtile, and on the weſt by Guipuſcoa and Alava. The form is that of a lozenge. Its extent from north-eaſt to ſouth-weſt about 54 miles, and from north-weſt to ſouth-eaſt, about 45. The climate is as pure and healthy, and withal as temperate and as pleaſant, as can be deſired, which may compenſate for ſome defects in the ſoil ; that, generally ſpeaking, is none of the moſt fertile. In ſome of the vallies, however, they have very good corn, excellent wine, both white and red ; the former equal to any in France, the latter very little inferior to Burgundy. It abounds in good paſtures, exceedingly well ſtocked with ſheep and goats. They have likewiſe tolerable black cattle, and a very good breed of horſes. The mountains are covered with timber ; and very few countries have veniſon and wild-fowl in greater plenty. It can ſcarce boaſt of any great river, except the Ebro, and this ſerves only for its frontier. The north-eaſt ſide is bounded by the Pyrennean mountains, through which there are ten paſſes into France, ſeven or eight of which are difficult and dangerous. The valley of Roncevaux lies to the north-eaſt of Pampeluna, and leads through a village called Burguet, which is the laſt in Navarre, to St. Juan Pie de Port, in France. This is the eaſieſt and moſt frequented paſs, and is famous for the defeat of the emperor Charlemagne. The king of Spain receives no revenue from this country, all the impoſts and duties being, by compact, to be employed in the public ſervices. Navarre, from the year 718 to 1512, had its peculiar kings, of different families : but in the laſt mentioned year, was reduced by king Ferdinand the Catholic, under the frivolous pretence that John d'Albert, its king, as ally of Louis XII. of France, with whom pope Julius II. was at variance, had been declared an enemy to the church, and excommunicated by that pope. This province is divided into five merindades or juriſdictions. Pamplona is the capital.

NAVARRE, or Lower Navarre. This country was originally one of the ſix merindads or bailiwicks which formerly compoſed the kingdom of Navarre, and, by the Spaniards, was called Merindada de Ultra Puertos, it being to them beyond the Pyrennées, and the road which leads over them, in their language called Puertos, i. e. the Gates. Ferdinand, king of Aragon and Caſtile, having, in having, in 1512, poſſeſſed himſelf of the kingdom of Navarre ; all that Catherine, the lawful heireſs, and her huſband John Albert, could procure to be reſtored to them, was this little ſpot. John, their ſon, had no better ſucceſs : his ſovereignty being confined to this ſcanty remnant of Navarre, though with the title of a kingdom. Johanna, his daughter, by his ſpouſe Margaret, in 1548, was married to Antony of Bourbon, to whom ſhe brought the above-mentioned remnant as a dowery, together with the juſteſt pretenſions againſt the king of Caſtile. Their ſon Henry IV. arrived to be king of France, and his ſon Louis XIII. in 1620, annexed Lower Navarre and Bearn to the crown of France. St. Jean Pie de Port was the capital. It now forms the department of the Lower Pyrennées.

NAVARRE (New), a province of North America, in New Mexico, bounded on the north by a country unknown, on the eaſt by New Mexico Proper, and New Biſcay, on the ſouth by Culiacan, and on the weſt by the Gulph of California. This country was conquered by the Spaniards, in the year 1552. The inhabitants conſiſted of divers tribes of Indians. St. Juan de Cinaloa, is the chief Spaniſh town.

NAUMBURG, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and capital of a biſhopric of the ſame name. The foundation or biſhopric is ſituated partly on the Saale and partly on the Elſter, the former part of it being wholly ſurrounded by the circle of Thuringia, and the latter by Thuringia and the circle of Leipſig, the principality of Altenburg, and county of Reuſs. The emperor Otto I. founded this biſhopric, in the year 968, at Zeitz : and though, in 1029, it is true, that the cathedral church was removed to Naumburg, yet all the canons did not quit Zeitz, but there ſtill remained there a collegiate church. Julius Pflug, famous for his learning and prudence, who died in the year 1564, was the laſt biſhop hereof, and after him duke Alexander of Saxony, was poſtulated to he adminiſtrator of the biſhopric, who died the year following; upon that his father, the elector Auguſtus, aſſumed the adminiſtration of it, which the following electors have alſo filled up. The biſhopric of Naumburg, as well as thoſe of Meiſſen and Merſeburg, is united to the electoral houſe, by virtue of a perpetual capitulation. Naumburg, the head town of the biſhopric, lies in a fertile and pleaſant tract, not far from the Saale, which in theſe parts receives into it the Unſtrut. Naumburg conſiſts of the town itſelf, which ſtands under the juriſdiction of its council, and contains a ſmall citadel, with three churches, and a town-ſchool. NAXIA, or Naxos, an iſland in the Grecian Archipelago, forty-eight miles in circumference. It is the moſt fertile iſland in all the Archipelago, and its wine ſtill maintains its former excellence. Beſides this, its plains are covered with orange, olive, lemon, cedar, citron, pomegranate, apple, mulberry, and fig-trees. It was alſo famed for a kind of marble, which the Greeks called Ophites, being green, ſpeckled with white, like a ſnake. Some mountains on the weſtern coaſt, afford emery of ſo much virtue, that the adjoining cape is by the Italians called Capo Smeriglio or Cape Emery. The people on the whole iſland do not exceed 8000, Greeks and Latins, who have each an archbiſhop here. The inhabitants, like moſt of theſe iſlands, have the choice of their own magiſtrates, but ſometimes a cadi takes a circuit among them, and to him appeals lie. It contains betwixt 40 or 50 villages, and but one town, which ſtands on the ſouth ſide of the iſland, and is defended by a caſtle. About a muſquet-ſhot from it, on a rock, near the ſea, ſtands a beautiful marble portal, amidſt a heap of fragments of marble and granite, ſuppoſed to have been a temple of Bacchus. Long. 43. 20. NEATH, a ſea-port town of South Wales, in the county of Glamorgan, ſituated on a river of the ſame name, a little way from the Briſtol Channel. It has a good harbour, and is a large and populous corporation town, governed by a portreeve, aldermen, &c. It had formerly a caſtle, ſmall remains of which are now to be ſeen. It has two markets, weekly, on Wedneſday and Saturday. This town exports annually from 60,000 to 70,000 chaldrons of coals, to Somerſet, Devon, Cornwall, and other parts. Here are two extenſive copper-works; alſo iron-furnaces at Neath abby; at Yniſygerwn, three miles above the town, there are extenſive tin-works. A navigable canal has lately been cut from Neath to the county of Brecon: the length of which is twelve miles, but will, in all probability, be extended farther, and open a communication with the north-weſt part of Glamorgan and Brecon. There are two conſtant traders from hence to London, and one to Briſtol: 9 miles NE. Swanſea, and 200 W. London. Long. 3. 47. W. Greenwich. Lat. 51. 37. N.

NEDSJED, a province of Arabia. This province is of vaſt extent, comprehending all the interior parts of Arabia; bounded on the north by the deſert of Syria, on the eaſt by Lachſa, on the ſouth by Hadramaut and Yemen, and on the weſt by Hedſjas. The ſoil is various; among the hills fertile, and bearing abundance of fruits, eſpecially dates; but being bounded by arid tracts of country, its rivers are only ſhort ſtreams, which, after paſſing through the vallies, have their waters abſorbed in the ſandy plains, before they can reach the ocean. Upon this account, the inhabitants are in many places obliged to dig deep wells; and cultivation is there difficult, or almoſt impoſſible. The Bedouins inhabit a great part of this province. The remainder is mountainous, full of cities and villages, and parcelled out among ſo many petty ſovereigns, that almoſt every little town has its own ſchiech. Formerly, when the power of the ſherifs was at its height, many of theſe ſchiechs, who were ſituated in the vicinity of Hedſjas, were obliged to pay tribute to the ſherif of Mecca. At preſent they pay nothing. The inhabitants of this vaſt country reſemble the other Arabs in their moral qualities; they are at once robbers and hoſpitable. As thoſe petty ſovereigns are ſo numerous in Nedſjed, it is impoſſible for any traveller to paſs ſafely through this country; the firſt ſchiech whoſe territory he enters, will be ſure to rob him, if it were only to prevent a neighbour, with whom he is at war, from profiting by this act of rapacity, if he himſelf ſhould abſtain from it. The caravan, indeed, travels ſafe between Oman and Mecca, becauſe it conſiſts of beggars, from whom nothing is to be gained. But the ſchiechs of Nedſjed levy a contribution upon the caravan from Bagdad on its way to Mecca; in the ſame manner as the ſchiechs of Hedſjas levy contribution upon thoſe from Syria and Egypt. The people appear to be of a very warlike character, and are almoſt conſtantly in arms. It is ſaid, that none of their young men are ſuffered to marry till after they have performed ſome gallant action.

NEDSJERA, a town of Arabia, in the province of Yemen: 14 miles NW. Sana.

NEDSJERAN, a principality of Arabia, in the country of Yemen, three days' journey north-eaſt from Saade; founded in the middle of the preſent century, by a ſchiech, named Mecrami. This narrow territory is fertile in corn and fruits, eſpecially in dates. It affords excellent paſturage; and its horſes and camels are in high requeſt through all Arabia. The capital of this ſmall kingdom is Nedſjeran, an ancient city famous in Arabian hiſtory. The other towns in it are places of little conſequence.

NEDWESTA, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Boleſlaw: 16 miles WNW. Jung Buntzel.

NEEDHAM, a town of England, in the county of Suffolk, with a weekly market on Wedneſday: 9½ miles NW. Ipſwich, and 73 NNE. London.

NEGRIL POINT (South), a cape on the weſt coaſt of the iſland of Jamaica. Long. 78. 23. W. Greenwich. Lat. 18. 17. N.

NEGROES (Iſland of), one of the Philippine Iſlands, in the Eaſtern Indian Sea; about 80 leagues in circumference. The inhabitants, which are black, are of two races, one inhabiting the mountains, the other chiefly dwelling near the rivers. About 3000 are tributary to the Spaniards. The chief produce of the iſland is rice and cacao. Long. 139. 5. E. Ferro. Lat. 10. 10. N.

NEGROLAND, or Nigritia, a name given to a vaſt extent of country, in the interior parts of Africa, and comprehending many great and populous kingdoms, extending from the 10th to the 45th degree of eaſt longitude from Ferro, and from the 10th to the 25th north latitude; being bounded on the north by Sahara and the mountains which ſeparate it from the ſtates of Barbary, on the eaſt by Nubia and Abyſſinia, on the ſouth by Guinea and countries unknown, and on the weſt by Guinea. The country to which the geographers of Europe have given the name Nigritia, is called by the Arabs Soudân, and by the natives Aafnou; two words of ſimilar import, that, like the European appellation, expreſs the Land of the Blacks, and like that too are applied to a part only of the region to which their meaning ſo obviouſly belongs; yet, even in this limited ſenſe, the word Soudân is often variouſly employed: for while ſome of the Africans reſtrict it to the empire of Caſhna, which is ſituated to the north of the Niger, others extend it, with indefinite comprehenſion, to the negro ſtates on the ſouth of the river. Of this vaſt country, little is known more than the names of ſome of the towns and kingdoms of which it is compoſed. Some parts, particularly on the river Niger, are repreſented as exceedingly fertile; other parts are repreſented as ſandy and deſert. That it is exceedingly populous, is evident, from the great ſupply of ſlaves it affords to the European traders.

NEGROPONT, an iſland in the Grecian Archipelago; ninety-ſix miles long, and from eight to ſixteen broad. This iſland was anciently called Eubœa, afterwards, from its capital, Egrippos, whence the word Negropont ſeems to be derived. In the moſt ancient times, it was called Chalcodotis, or Calus Macra, or Macris. It is divided from the continent by a ſtrait, formerly called Euripus, but now ſo narrow at the capital, that a gally can hardly paſs through; and is joined to the continent by a bridge, being thought to have been once ſo by an iſthmus. The Euripus was anciently much celebrated for the ſtated irregularities of its motions. The learned Jeſuit Babin obſerves, that, in the firſt eight days of the month, and from the 14th to the 20th, incluſively, and alſo in the three laſt days, it is regular both in its ebb and flood; but, on the other days of the lunar month, very irregular; the ebb and flood returning ſometimes eleven, twelve, thirteen, and fourteen times within twenty-four or twenty-five hours. This irregularity, which has baffled the reſearches both of ancients and moderns, gave riſe to a proverb among the Greeks. Such is the fertility of the level parts of this iſland, that it abounds in a very extraordinary manner in grain, wine, oil, and all kinds of excellent fruits. It has alſo ſeveral mountains, which, for a conſiderable part of the year, are covered with ſnow. Of theſe, the higheſt is Oche. Among the capes, the moſt remarkable are Capo d'Oro, called Capo Chimi, Capo Figara, the ancient name of which was Caphareus, and Capo Liter, formerly Cenæum. In the firſt ages, when navigation was in its infancy, ſailing round the firſt of theſe capes was reckoned dangerous, by reaſon of the many rocks and whirlpools along the coaſt. This iſland had formerly a great number of conſiderable cities, but the only places now worth notice are Negropont and Caſtel Roſſo. Long. 40. 56. to 42. 30. E. Ferro. Lat. 38. to 32. 10. N.

NEGROPONT, a ſea-port town on the weſt coaſt of the iſland of the ſame name, in the Grecian Archipelago, probably, ſituated on the ruins of Chalcis, the ancient capital of the iſland. The admiral of Turkey, who is alſo governor of the iſland and the adjacent parts of Greece, reſides here; and the harbour is ſeldom without a fleet of gallies. It is alſo the ſeat of a Greek biſhop. Long. 41. 40. E. Ferro. Lat. 38. 30. N.

NEHAVEND, a town of Perſia, in the province of Irac, celebrated for a battle between the caliph Omar and Jezdegird, king of Perſia, in the year 638, in which the latter loſt his life and kingdom. NEISSE, or Neyſſe, a principality of Sileſia, ſometimes, but improperly, called the Principality of Grotkau. The dignity of a prince, which it had been in poſſeſſion of long before being annexed to it, the circle of Grotkau was, by purchaſe, added to its territories. This principality, which is environed by thoſe of Munſterberg, Brieg, Oppeln, and Jagerndorf, as alſo of Moravia and the county of Glatz, is one of the largeſt in all Sileſia, and, among the mediate principalities, the firſt. The ſouthern half of it is very hilly; but the northern half, as being leſs mountainous, is more fertile. The Neiſſe and Grotkau circles breed good horſes. The latter alſo yields tobacco, and in the former is made a great number of iron-mills. Its largeſt river is the Neiſſe. The whole principality of Neiſſe contains under it eleven cities. It belongs to the biſhopric of Breſlau. At the peace of Berlin, in 1742, as well as at that of Dreſden, in 1745, the part of this principality lying contiguous to Moravia was continued annexed to the crown of Bohemia. Though the Grotkau diſtrict of itſelf forms no duchy, nor any diſtrict principality, yet is the biſhop of Breſlau uſually ſtyled prince of Neiſſe and duke of Grotkau; and by virtue of this principality takes place of all the other places in Sileſia.

NEISSE, or Neyſze, a city of Sileſia, and capital of the principality of the ſame name. It is a place of great ſtrength, and ſituated on the ſide of the river Neiſſe, on the oppoſite ſide of which, on a hill, where Frederick II. at the ſiege of this city, in 1741, raiſed his firſt battery, is a Pruſſian fort, erected in 1743, by order of the ſaid prince, who himſelf laid the firſt ſtone of it. The king appoints a governor and commandant here; but the prince and biſhop is poſſeſſed of the palace, with a treaſury, a court of juſtice, a demeſne and conſiſtorial office. This town was pillaged and deſtroyed, in 1284, by duke Henry IV. In 1525, one half of it was demoliſhed by fire. In 1642, it was taken by the Swedes, and in 1741, by the Pruſſians. In 1758, the Auſtrians having laid ſiege to it, it was fortunately relieved by the king of Pruſſia. In 1741, the Auſtrian commandant cauſed the ſuburbs to be ſet on fire, but after the peace of Dreſden they were rebuilt, and a new ſuburb added, by the name of the Friedrichſtadt, lying between Pruſſia Fort and the Neiſſe, in which is held a court, in his majeſty's name: 42 miles S. Breſlau, and 115 E. Prague. Long. 35. 5. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 19. N.

NEISSE, a river which riſes in the north part of Bohemia, ſoon after enters Luſatia, and paſſes by Hirſhfield, Goritz, Rothenburg, Priebus, Forſte, Guben, &c. and enters the Oder, about 12 miles NE. from the latter town.

NEKOUBAU, a lake of North America, in Canada: 8 leagues NW. Quebec.

NELISURAM, a town of Hindooſtan, and capital of a ſmall country on the weſt coaſt, to the ſouth of Canara: 33 miles NE. Mangalore, and 40 NNW. Tellicherry. Long. 74. 57. E. Greenwich. Lat. 12. 10. N.

NELLEMBI, a town of the iſland of Ceylon: 14 miles S. Candi.

NELLENBURG, a landgraviate of Germany, in the circle of Suabia, purchaſed by the Auſtrian archduke, Sigiſmund, in the year 1465, of John count of Thengen, for 37,905 Rheniſh florins; and by the emperor, Charles V. in 1542, of count Chriſtopher of Thengen, together with the ſeigniory of Thengen, for 8310 florins. The whole landgraviate conſiſted formerly of the towns and prefecturates named from it, viz. Stockach, Aach, and Thengen, and contained about thirty boroughs, villages, and a diſtrict of thirty-two miles in circuit. But after Thengen had been diſmembered from it, and raiſed to a particular county, inveſted with princely dignity, the landgraviate became remarkably leſs; and it ſtill wants, in particular, the land-court, which is held at Stockach, to be poſſeſſed of an extenſive juriſdiction over the whole Hegau. The foreſts extend quite to Schaffhauſen, Sigmaringen, and Tutlingen, on the Danube. The landgraviate is governed by a landvogt. It takes its name from Nellenburg, a town and citadel ſituated on a mountain: 16 miles NW. Conſtance, and 15 NE. Schaffhauſen.

NELLORE, a town and fortreſs of Hindooſtan, in the Carnatic, near the Pennar river: 85 miles N. Madras, and 98 N. Arcot. Long. 79. 57. E. Greenwich. Lat. 14. 26. N.

NELSON'S FORT, a fort and ſettlement of North America, in the county of Labrador, at the mouth of Nelſon's River; originally built by ſome French adventurers, but now belonging to the Engliſh Hudſon's Bay company; for the purpoſe of trading with the Indians for furs.

NELSON'S RIVER, a river of North America, which runs into Hudſon's Bay. Long. 92. 46. W. Greenwich. Lat. 57. 2. N.

NERESHEIM, a town of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, and principality of Oettingen. Near it is a princely abby, of the ſame name, which is rated fourteen florins, ſix kruitzers to the Roman month, and is taxed to the imperial chamber at nine florins: 12 miles SSW. Oettingen, and 6 SSW. Nordlingen.

NERESI, a town of the ſouth ſide of the iſland of Brazza, in the Adriatic, and reſidence of the governor,

NERESTABLE, a town of France, in the department of the Rhône and Loire: 4 leagues SW. Roanne.

NERHELBENO, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Kiov: 48 miles WNW. Kiov.

NERICIA, or Neriké, a province of Sweden, bounded on the north by Weſtmanland, on the eaſt by Sudermanland, on the ſouth by Eaſt and Weſt Gothland, and on the weſt by Warmeland. This province is about 60 miles in length, and 48 in breadth. In moſt parts of it the ſoil is fertile, and produces corn and paſturage. This country yields iron and ſulphur mines, quarries of load-ſtone, alum, lime-ſtone, &c. Conſequently, it has iron founderies, with ſulphur and lead-works. Here are large woods, ſeveral high mountains, conſiderable rivers, and twenty-three lakes, which abound in fiſh. Nericia is famous for ſeveral flouriſhing manufactures of all kinds of hard ware; and it has always been remarkable for forging arms, &c. The chief occupations of the inhabitants are agriculture, working in the mines and forges, hunting, and fiſhing. Orebro is the principal town.

NERILKERY, a town of Hindooſtan, in the Myſore country: 12 miles E. Seringapatam.

NERINGJIPETTY, a pagoda of Hindooſtan, in the Myſore country: 8 miles SSE. Coveriporum.

NERIS, a town of France, in the department of the Allier, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Montluçon, with a medicinal ſpring: 1 league SE. Montluçon.

NERON, or Neronde, a town of France, in the department of the Rhône and Loire: 8½ leagues W. Lyons, and 5 NNE. Montbriſon. Long. 21. 49. E. Ferro. Lat. 45. 5. N.

NERONDOS, a town of France, in the department of the Cher, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Sancoins: 5¾ leagues ESE. Bourges, and 3½ N. Sancoins.

NERSTEIN, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhina, and palatinate of the Rhine: 1 mile N. Oppenheim.

NERSTIN, a town of the duchy of Courland: 18 miles SSW. Seelburg.

NERTCHA, a river of Ruſſia, which runs into the Amur, near Nertchinſk.

NERTCHINSK, a town of Ruſſia, in the government of Irkutſk, on the Nertcha, near its union with the Amur, built in the year 1658, on the borders of China. On the fort, which was the firſt beginning of the town, are thirty-two braſs guns, and one of iron. The town, beſides ſome public edifices, contains one hundred and fifty houſes, moſt of which are very meanly built. The Chineſe caravans formerly paſſed through this place, but now they take another road. However, the Ruſſian envoys are received, and handſomely entertained by the Chineſe, and the like compliment is paid to thoſe of China, by the Ruſſians, in this town. A treaty of peace was concluded at Nertchinſk, between Ruſſia and China, in the year 1689. This town ſeems to derive its name from the two ſmall rivers called Nertcha and Shinke, between which it lies. The adjacent country is, indeed, very mountainous, but yields excellent paſture for cattle. In this province are ſome conſiderable ſilver-mines, which yield annually about 16,000 pound weight. The ſilver contains, in 40,000 pounds, nearly 500 of gold, which is ſeparated at Peterſburgh. The ores being generally very rich in lead, and extremely poor in ſilver, the latter is eaſily extracted. Many millions of pounds of lead remain uſeleſs upon the ſpot, only about 14,000 or 18,000 being annually required for the ſeparation of the ſilver from the copper, at the founderies of Kolyvan; the carriage into the inner parts of the empire being too expenſive; and the export of China being prohibited: 440 miles E. Irkutſk. Long. 134. 30. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 12. N.

NEROI, a town of Italy, in the ſtate of Genoa: 5 miles ESE. Genoa.

NERVIEUX & GRENIER, a town of France, in the department of the Rhône and Loire: 10 miles N. Montbriſon.

NERVIO, a river of Spain, in the province of Biſcay, called by the natives Ybai-çabal, which paſſes by Bilbao, and runs into the ſea two miles below that town.

NES, a river of Denmark, and the iſland of Zealand, which runs into the Baltic, four miles S. Neſtved.

NESA, a town of Perſia, in the province of Choraſan: 80 leagues N. Herat.

NESCOPEK, a mountain of North America, in the ſtate of Pennſylvania, to the coaſt of the Suſquehannah river.

NESIGODA, a lake of Sileſia, in the principality of Oels: 8 miles W. Militſch.

NESIRBAD, a town of Perſia, in the province of Farſiſtan: 23 leagues SSE. Schiras.

NESLE, a town of France, in the department of the Somme, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Peronne: 3½ leagues S. Peronne, and 8½ E. Amiens. Long. 20. 35. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 12. N.

NESLE, a town of Egypt, on the ſide of a canal, in a country remarkable for the forwardneſs of the harveſt.

NESLOUR, a ſmall iſland in the Perſian Gulf: 43 leagues WSW. Ormus.

NESMIEL, a town of Hungary: 6 miles SE. Comorn.

NESPEREIRA, a town of Spain, in the province of Galicia: 12 miles N. Tuy.

NESS, a town of Norway, in the dioceſe of Aggerhuus: 36 miles NNW. Chriſtiania.

NESS, a river of Scotland, which runs from Loch Neſs, to the Frith of Murray, a little below Inverneſs.

NESSE, a ſmall iſland of Germany, in the river Ems, belonging to Eaſt Frieſland: 1 mile NE. Ort.

NESSELROD, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and duchy of Berg: 3 miles S. Solingen.

NESTE, a river of France, which runs into the Garonne, at Monreal.

NESTES, before the revolution, a ſmall country of France, now in the department of the Higher Pyrennées. Le Barthe was the capital.

NESTIER, a town of France, in the department of the Upper Pyrennées, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of La Barthe: 4 miles E. La Barthe.

NESTOSA (La), a town of Spain, in the province of Biſcay: 25 miles WSW. Bilbao.

NESTVED, a town of Denmark, in the iſland of Zealand, on the river Nes, near the ſouth coaſt. The river divides the town into two unequal parts, which are called Great and Little Neſtved, and then runs into the Baltic. This gives the inhabitants an opportunity of carrying on ſome little trade. Here are two pariſh churches. There were formerly ſeveral convents in this town; and there is a piece of money ſtill extant, which was coined here. In the year 1259, a bloody and deciſive battle was fought near Neſtved; and, in 1271, the town was much damaged by fire: 22 miles ESE. Corſoer, and 38 SW. Copenhagen. Long. 11. 51. E. Greenwich. Lat. 55. 15. N.

NETHE, a river of Brabant, which runs into the Dyle, about 6 miles NW. Malines.

NETHERLANDS (The), or The Seventeen Provinces. This country is bounded on the north by the German Sea, on the eaſt by Eaſt Frieſland, the biſhopric of Munſter, county of Bentheim, duchy of Cleves, archbiſhopric of Cologn, and duchy of Juliers; on the ſouth by the biſhopric of Liege, and by France; and on the weſt by the German Sea, and part of France. It extends from Long. 2. 30. to Long 7. 20. E. from London, and from 49. 25. to 53. 30. N. The name given to this country by the Romans, was Belgium; by the Spaniards, it is called, Pays-baxo; by the French, Pays bas; by the Germans, Niederlande; and, by the Engliſh, Netherlands, or Low Countries. The modern name, it owes to its ſituation with reſpect to High Germany. Some authors have called it Lower Germany, but improperly, as it never made a part of that country. In the time of the Romans, the inhabitants were Pagans, and worſhipped ſeveral idols. Hiſtorians are not agreed, when Chriſtianity was firſt introduced into this country. At the latter end of the third century, Pope Marcellin ſent many eccleſiaſtics into France and this country, and many converts were made. In the beginning of the fifth century, the Vandals over-ran the country, and committed great enormities. In the year 445, Clodio, king of France, rendered himſelf maſter of Cambray and Tournay, and ſubdued the country to the Meuſe. In the year 451, Attila, king of the Huns, with an army of 600,000 men, over-ran the country, and burnt moſt of the towns. During the latter end of this century, a biſhopric was erected at Tournay, and, as Chriſtianity began to flouriſh, churches were built at Cambray, Arras, Terouane, Maeſtricht, and many other towns. In the year 608, St. Amand preached at Ghent; and, in the latter end of the ſeventh century, St. Willebrord, with his companions, preached the goſpel in Holland, Zealand, and Utrecht. The Romans became maſters of this country with conſiderable difficulty, as the people were the moſt warlike of all the Gauls. They were afterwards treated as friends, aſſociates, and brothers. After the decline of the Roman power, it came under the power of the Franks, and gradually was divided into provinces, forming ſo many different ſtates: the number of provinces are generally reckoned ſeventeen; viz. the duchies of Brabant, Limburg, Luxemburg, and Gueldres, the marquiſate of the empire, Antwerp; the comtes of Flanders, Artois, Hainault, Namur, Zutphen, Holland, and Zealand; and lordſhips of Malines, Utrecht, Overiſſel, Frieſland, and Groningen; to theſe is added, Cambreſis; ſo, that, in fact, there would then be eighteen; but Guelderland and Zutphen being politically united by the Dutch States, they were called ſeventeen; and the United States are always called the Seven, altho' actually, according to the above ſtatement, eight. The diviſion of the Netherlands into ſo many ſtates, is derived from the earls or counts of Ardenne, deſcended from the ſons of Clodio, king of France. Philip, ſurnamed the Hardy, or Bold, duke of Burgundy, and ſon of John, king of France, married Margaret, the only daughter of Louis de Male, or Malain, earl of Flanders and Artois, and ſucceeded to theſe two earldoms after the death of Louis, who died in the year 1383. Antony of Burgundy, the ſecond ſon of Philip, got the duchies of Braban bant and Limburg, the marquiſate of the Holy Empire, and the lordſhip of Mechlin, or Malines, in the year 1406, as heir to Jane, his aunt, by the father's ſide, the daughter of John III. duke of Brabant, and ſiſter to Margaret, the wife of Louis de Male. He left two ſons, John IV. who died April the 17th, 1426, and Philip, who died Auguſt the 4th, 1430. As they both died childleſs, Philip the Good, duke of Burgundy, their firſt couſin, ſucceeded to thoſe duchies, to the marquiſate, and to the lordſhip of Mechlin: he had bought, in the year 1429, the county of Namur, of Thierry, the laſt earl, leaving him, however, the titles and profit of it till his death. John, the ſon of Philip the Good, had married Margaret, the daughter of Albert, of Bavaria, earl of Holland, and ſiſter to William, the father of Joan of Bavaria, counteſs of Hainault, Holland, and Zealand, and lady of Frieſland. This counteſs had four huſbands, but no children by any of them; ſo, that Philip the Good, who was her firſt couſin, inherited all her eſtates, the adminiſtration and government of which ſhe had been obliged to give up to him ſome years before ſhe died. The ſame Philip, in the year 1443, ſeized upon the duchy of Luxemburg, having driven out of it William, duke of Brunſwick, who had uſurped it from Elizabeth, the widow of Antony, duke of Brabant, and daughter of John of Luxemburg, duke of Gorlitz, who was brother to the emperors Wenceſlaus and Sigiſmund. Charles, the ſon of Philip the Good, bought, in the year 1472, the duchy of Guelderland, and the county of Zutphen, of Arnold, of Egmond, the father of Adolphus, who was a priſoner at Courtray; but Charles being killed in the year 1476, Catharine, the ſiſter of Adolphus, retook Guelderland for her nephew, Charles of Egmond. Mary, the only daughter and heireſs of Charles, duke of Burgundy, juſt now mentioned, married Maximilian, of Auſtria, ſon of the emperor, Ferdinand III. and brought him in marriage, the duchies of Brabant, Limburg, and Luxemburg; the counties of Flanders, Burgundy, Hainaut, Holland, Zealand, and Namur; and the lordſhips of Frieſland. Philip, of Auſtria, ſon to Maximilian and Mary, married Jane, the daughter of Ferdinand, king of Aragon, and of Iſabella, queen of Caſtile, by which means, their ſon, Charles, inherited not only almoſt all Spain, and the great countries then lately diſcovered in America, but alſo thoſe noble provinces of the Netherlands; and was choſen emperor, under the name of Charles V. Towards the latter end of the year 1527, he added to his dominions the temporalities of the biſhopric of Utrecht, on both ſides of the Yſſel; and, Henry of Bavaria, being diſtreſſed, through war with the duke of Guelderland, and tired with the continued rebellion of his own ſubjects, ſurrendered to the emperor the temporalities of his dioceſe, which was confirmed by the Pope, and the ſtates of the country. In 1536, Charles V. bought of Charles of Egmond, the reverſion of the duchy of Guelderland, and of the county of Zutphen, in caſe that prince ſhould die without iſſue. The ſame year, the city of Groningen took the oath of allegiance, and ſubmitted to Charles V.; and, in 1543, he put a garriſon into the city of Cambray, and built a citadel there. Having thus united the ſeventeen provinces, as it were, in one body, he ordered that they ſhould continue for ever under the ſame prince, without being ever ſeparated, or diſmembered; for which purpoſe, he publiſhed in November, 1549, with the conſent, and at the requeſt of all the ſtates of the provinces, a perpetual and irrevocable edict, or law, by which it was enacted, that, in order to keep all thoſe provinces together, under one and the ſame prince, the right of repreſentation, with regard to the ſucceſſion of a prince, or princeſs, ſhould take place for ever, both in a direct and collateral line, notwithſtanding the common laws of ſome provinces to the contrary. Charles had even a mind to incorporate theſe provinces with the Germanic body, and to make of them a circle of the empire, under the title of the circle of Burgundy, in order thereby to engage princes of the empire to concern themſelves for the preſervation of thoſe provinces. But, the Netherlanders, always jealous of their liberty, did not ſeem to like that incorporation; and, when they were demanded to pay their ſhare towards the expences of the empire, they refuſed it; whereupon the princes of Germany refuſed, in their turn, to take any part in the wars in Flanders, and looked upon thoſe provinces as by no means belonging to the Germanic body. Philip of Auſtria, and his ſon, Charles, who were born in the Netherlands, had for theſe provinces that natural affection which men uſed to have for their native country, and knowing how jealous the inhabitants were of their liberty, and of the privileges granted to them by their former princes, they took great care to preſerve them, and ſuffered willingly that the ſtates, who were the guardians of the people's liberty and privileges, ſhould, in a manner, ſhare the ſupreme authority with them. Philip II. ſon to the emperor, Charles V. had not the ſame affection for the Netherlands, nor thoſe generous ſentiments which his father had endeavoured to inſpire him with. Being born in Spain, of a Portugueſe woman, he had no regard but for his native country; and, when he removed out of the Netherlands, he left them to the weak government of a woman, to the proud and haughty ſpirit of cardinal de Granville, and to the wild ambition of ſome lords of theſe provinces, who, availing themſelves of the imprudent conduct, and continual blunders of the council of Spain, found their private intereſt in the diſturbances they could not fail to produce. Philip II. alſo, inſtead of the mild and moderate meaſures which his predeceſſors had ſucceſsfully employed, on many occaſions, as beſt ſuiting the genius and temper of the people, had recourſe to the moſt violent and cruel proceedings; which, far from curing the evil, ſerved only to exaſperate it the more, and render it incurable. The Spaniards, whom he ſent thither, being born and educated in an abſolute monarchy, jealous of the liberties, and envious of the riches of the people, broke through all their privileges, and uſed them almoſt after the ſame manner as they had done the inhabitants of their new and ill-gotten dominions in America. This treatment occaſioned a general inſurrection. The counts Hoorn, Egmont, and the prince of Orange, appearing at the head of it, and Luther's reformation gaining ground about the ſame time in the Netherlands, his diſciples joined the malecontents: whereupon, king Philip introduced a kind of inquiſition, in order to ſuppreſs them, and many thouſands were put to death by that court, beſides thoſe that periſhed by the ſword; for theſe perſecutions and encroachments had occaſioned a civil war, in which ſeveral battles were fought. The counts Hoorn and Egmont were taken and beheaded; but the prince of Orange retiring into Holland, did, by the aſſiſtance of England and France, preſerve Holland, and ſome of the adjacent provinces, which entered into a treaty, for their mutual defence, at Utrecht, in 1579, and they have ever ſince been ſtyled the United Provinces. The ſeven united provinces are, Holland, Zealand, Frieſland, Groningen, Overiſſel, Guelderland united with Zutphen, and Utrecht. The Spaniards continued poſſeſſed of almoſt eight of theſe provinces, until the duke of Marlborough, general of the allies, gained the memorable victory of Ramillies. After which, Bruſſels, the capital, and great part of theſe provinces, acknowledged Charles VI. (afterwards emperor) their ſovereign; and his daughter, the late empreſs queen, remained poſſeſſed of them, till the war that followed the death of her father, when the French made an entire conqueſt of them, except part of the province of Luxemburg; but they were reſtored by the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, in 1748, the French retaining only Artois, the Cambreſis, part of Flanders, part of Hainaut, and part of Luxemburg. The ſoil is generally fruitful, but differs in the ſeveral parts. The climate, alſo, differs in the ſeveral provinces; in thoſe towards the ſouth, it does not differ much from that of England, though the ſeaſons are more regular. In the northern provinces, the winter is generally very ſharp, and the ſummer ſultry hot; but the extreme cold, and exceſſive heat, ſeldom continue above five or ſix weeks. The air is reckoned very wholeſome, but is ſubject to thick fogs in winter, through the moiſtneſs of the country, which would be very noxious, were it not for the dry eaſterly winds, which, blowing off a long continent for two or three months in a year, clear the air, and cauſe very ſharp froſts in January and February; during which, the ports, rivers, and canals, are commonly ſhut up. The face of the country is low and flat, for, except ſome ſmall hills, and a few riſing grounds in the provinces of Utrecht and Guelderland, and in the parts lying towards Germany, there is no hill to be ſeen in the whole ſeventeen provinces. The provinces towards the ſea lie ſo very low, that large parts of them have been many times overflowed by the eruptions of the ſea, notwithſtanding the ſtrong banks, which the inhabitants keep up, at a great expence, almoſt all along the coaſt of Groningen, Frieſland, North Holland, Zealand, &c. Theſe banks and dykes are commonly 17 ells thick, and yet have not been found ſufficient to reſiſt the violence of the ſea, and land floods. The Netherlands were once the centre of the woollen manufactures, the materials for which, particularly the wool and the fuller's earth, they had from England. The Flemings being deprived of their fund of wool, were obliged to turn their hands to other things; which brought them to the making of lace and linen, to ſilk weaving, and to other buſineſs of various kinds; ſo that the manufactures carried on in theſe provinces at preſent, are lace, of which the fineſt and beſt of the kind in Europe, is ſaid to be made at Bruſſels; fine thread, linen, conſiſting chiefly of cambrics and lawns; woollen, which includes the tapeſtry made at Arras, and the adjacent country, and ſilk. In regard to induſtry, the Netherlanders are an example to the whole world. Nothing can live where they ſtarve, and nothing is idle among them, that can ſuſtain any degree of labour. The univerſal navigation of the rivers and canals paſſing through innumerable cities and populous towns, implies, that there muſt be a great inland traffic; and this, indeed, in proportion to the extent of territory, is prodigious. The trade of the French and Dutch Netherlands, is much the ſame with that of the Auſtrian; and, in regard to the Dutch, particularly, it may be ſaid, that there is not a manufacture in Europe, but is managed to advantage among them, nor a place in the world but they viſit with their fleets. They have alſo ſome advantages in their traffic, which the reſt of the world cannot rival them in, particularly in the ſale of the fine ſpices, which they have long monopolized; and in the herring and whale fiſheries, by which they acquire immenſe wealth. The great trade of Holland, aroſe chiefly from the deſtruction of Antwerp, which, when the civil wars in the Netherlands broke out, was, and had long been the centre of traffic in Europe. The troubles in France, the wars in Germany, and the religious perſecutions ſet on foot in other parts of Europe, continued to fill the United provinces with people, merely becauſe here they might enjoy a liberty of conſcience, and the fruits of their induſtry, in peace. Thoſe who reſorted thither, were ſuch as had wherewithal to live upon, or were acquainted with ſome manufacture or myſtery, by which a living might be obtained. Both were welcome, and both ſorts of people were very ſoon at their eaſe; new manufactures were every day ſet on foot, and trades, too big even for a wealthy purſe, were managed with facility, and to great advantage, by joint ſtocks; the fiſheries were annually improved; new branches of commerce were continually opened; and, in the compaſs of twenty years, their villages ſwelled into fair towns, and thoſe that were good towns before, roſe into rich cities. At firſt, the inhabitants of thoſe provinces carried on a large trade to Portugal, from whence they received great quantities of Indian goods; but when Philip II. became maſter of Portugal, he put an end to that trade, which inſtead of proving a misfortune, was, in reality, of high advantage to the Dutch, by forcing them to attempt opening a trade to the Eaſt Indies, which in the compaſs of a few years, they did with ſucceſs beyond their hopes; and this commerce being managed by a company, with great prudence, frugality, and induſtry, ſoon produced prodigious advantages. This encouraged them to ſet up a Weſt India company, and that, too, became not leſs flouriſhing in a very ſhort ſpace of time. The ſubjects of the ſtate, likewiſe, by the recommendation, and under the protection of Henry IV. of France, obtained leave to trade in all the ports within the dominions of the grand ſignior; ſo that their commerce in the Levant became alſo very conſiderable. Taking, therefore, their fiſheries, manufactories, and foreign trade together, we may eaſily account for the growth of their naval power, the increaſe of their wealth, and the poſſibility of their ſuſtaining that infinite variety of taxes, cuſtoms and exciſes, which were neceſſary to ſupport ſo long and ſo expenſive a war, as that by which their liberties were eſtabliſhed and ſecured. Each province or ſtate is deſcribed more particularly under its reſpective head.

NETIESS, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Schlan: 11 miles NE. Schlan.

NETO, a river of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, which runs into the ſea, about ſeven miles NNW. from Cotrona, between the provinces of Calabria Citra, and Calabria Ultra.

NEUBURG, a town of Germany, in the circle of Bavaria, and capital of the principality of the ſame name. The principalities of Neuburg and Saltzbach were all that Robert count Palatine, recovered of the eſtates of George duke of Bavaria, after an unfortunate war, which ended in the year 1507. They were afterwards divided, but are now united. Neuburg has a voice at the diet, in the college of princes. The Roman month is eighty-eight florins, and the tax to the imperial chamber 340 rix-dollars ſeventy kruitzers. It enjoys a government of its own, together with a chamber of juſtice, and prefecturate-office. In it, indeed are ſtill ſome Lutheran fieſs, but the prevailing religion here is the Roman Catholic. Neuberg, the capital of the whole duchy, and ſeat of the government, tribunal, and prefecturate, ſtands on a good ſituation, on a hill, on the Danube, well built and fortified, with a palace in it. At this place likewiſe is held a court, under the direction of the great huntſman of the duchy. In the years 1632, and 1633, Neuberg was taken by the Swedes and Bavarians; in 1703, by the Bavarians, and, in 1744, by the Auſtrians: 24 miles NNE. Augſburg, and 15 W. Ingoldſtadt. Long. 28. 54. E. Ferro. Lat. 48. 40. N.

Neuchâtel, or Neufchâtel (County of), an eſtate in alliance with the cantons of Swiſſerland, bounded on the north-weſt by France, on the north-eaſt by the biſhopric of Bâle and canton of Bern, on the ſouth eaſt by the lake of Neuchâtel, and on the ſouth by the bailiwick of Granſon. The county of Neuchâtel, and lordſhip of Valengin, united about two centuries ago, form a country about ten leagues in length and four in breadth. It is every where hilly, and along its northern and weſtern borders, runs the Jura chain. This mountainous part producing very little, except herbage for cattle. The inhabitants are moſtly artificers, and procure themſelves a comfortable ſubſiſtence by their labours. But the other eminences here, with the vales and levels, abound in a fine red and white wine, fruits, corn, hemp, and flax. In the whole principality are four towns and ſixty-four villages. The greateſt part of the inhabitants are Proteſtants, but in the bailiwick of Landeron, Popery is the prevailing religion. Anciently, this country belonged to the laſt kingdom of Burgundy, with which in 1032, it devolved to the German empire. In 1034, Ulrich I. count of Phœnix, or Fenis, was lord of Neufchâtel, but appears to have held it as a fief from Rodolphus III. His male deſcendants continued in poſſeſſion of it till the year 1373, afterwards it paſſed into ſeveral different families, and, among the reſt, to the houſe of Châlons. In 1694, William III. king of Great Britain, as heir to the lordſhip of the Châlons family, ſolemnly made over to Frederick, elector of Brandenburg, afterwards king of Pruſſia, all his right of Neufchâtel and Valengin, which, in 1703, was notified by the latter, to the ſtates thereof. Mary, ducheſs of Nemours, who had hitherto enjoyed theſe territories, dying in 1707, ſeveral illuſtrious families put in their claims to them. The high tribunal, however, of the three ſtates of Neufchâtel, after a mature and impartial examination of the ſeveral allegations of the reſpective parties, on the third of November, 1707, paſſed a decree in favour of Frederick I. king of Pruſſia, who immediately took poſſeſſion of it, and the uſual homage was performed to him: he, on his part, likewiſe, confirming to them all the liberties and privileges of the ſtate, as alſo its alliances, and communities of rights with the neighbouring powers. At the peace of Utrecht, concluded in 1713, between France and Pruſſia, the French monarch acknowledged the king of Pruſſia, as ſovereign lord of Neufchâtel and Valengin, and farther promiſed not to moleſt him, either publicly or privately, in the poſſeſſion of theſe countries; nor to permit his ſubjects to attempt any ſuch moleſtation. The inhabitants alſo, in all parts of France, are entitled to the ſame rights and freedoms which are indulged to the natives of the Swiſs cantons, or were granted to them, before the king of Pruſſia became their ſovereign.

Neuchâtel, or Neufchâtel, or Neuenburg, a town and capital of the principality ſo called. This town ſtands on two eminences adjoining to the lake of the ſame name, which, at this place, receives into it the river Seyon. It conſiſts of four large ſtreets, and an old caſtle, which ſerves as the governor's reſidence, with two churches, in one of which divine ſervice is performed in the German language, and a gymnaſium. Around the town, on all ſides, are vineyards, gardens, and ſeats. Its regency conſiſts of the leſſer and the greater council; the former of which is compoſed of twenty-four members, and the latter of forty. Theſe attend to the police and other public concerns. Their preſident is the firſt amtſhurgher maſter, though the town meyer is alſo preſent at their meetings, by virtue of a mandate from the ſovereign, and even gives his vote covered. The leſſer council is poſſeſſed of the lower juriſdiction, in the firſt inſtance, throughout all the meyery. Criminal caſes are tried by the miniſtraux, a court compoſed of four burghermaſters, aſſiſted by the verner, the town-clerk, and the four ſchluſſelmeiſters. In the year 1530, this town declared for the reformation. In 1406, it entered into a perpetual community of rights with the city of Berne, which it renewed again in 1550, 1570, and 1616; and is exempt from all impoſts and tythes. The town itſelf is ſaid to have been built by the emperor Conrad, about the year 1034, and to have ſtood within the territories of the old county of Burgen: 50 miles SSE. Bâle. Long. 24. 30. E. NEUSTADT AM CULMEN, or Am Rauben Culmen, or Neuſtadt between the Culmen, a town of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, and principality of Culmbach. It takes its name from two mountains, between which it is ſituated. The citadel of Culmen, and ſome other villages, were mortgaged by the landgrave, Frederick of Leuchtenberg, and his ſon, Frederick, in the year 1281, to the burggrave, Frederick II. or III. for the ſum of 400 marks of ſilver, who afterwards diveſted themſelves of it; upon which, in 1282, the burggrave obtained the inveſtiture of it of king Rudolph. In the year 1730, the emperor, Charles IV. granted the burggrave, Frederick V. the liberty of building a town between the two fortreſſes of the rough and ſlight Culm: 12 miles SE. Bayreuth, and 12 SW. Wonſiedel.

NEUSTADT EBERSWALDE, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and Middle Mark of Brandenburg, on the Finow canal, which forms a communication between the Havel and the Oder: 36 miles NW. Franckfort on the Oder, and 28 NE. Berlin.

NEUVILLE (La), a town of Swiſſerland, in the biſhopric of Bâle. This town, in 1367, held out a very vigorous ſiege of ten days againſt the forces of the city of Bern, who made divers aſſaults upon it; but, in 1388, the times being critical and troubleſome, with the conſent of the biſhop's meyer, it entered into a community of rights and defenſive alliance with that city; which league, till the year 1615, was never oppoſed by its prelates. On the contrary, in 1633, it was acknowledged by them, and even ſtill ſubſiſts, though ſome years ſince it has occaſioned long and vehement conteſts between the town and the biſhop, its ſovereign. In 1758, by the mediation of the city of Bern, theſe differences were fully accommodated. Its government is compoſed of two burgher-maſters, and a ſmall and great council, each conſiſting of twenty-four perſons. In 1530, the inhabitants declared for the reformation, and have ever ſince firmly adhered to its tenets: 7 miles SSW. Bienne, and 9 NE. Neufchâtel.

NEUVILLE, a town of France, in the department of the Rhône and Loire, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Camp de Lyons: 2 leagues N. Lyons.

NEUWALDE, a town of Sileſia, in the principality of Neiſſe: 2½ miles NNE. Ziegenhals.

NEUWIED, or New Wied, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and county of Wied Runkel, on the Rhine. A late traveller, who viſited this town in the year 1794, ſays, that the general report, that it is one of the moſt commercial places on the Rhine, appeared to be true from the cheerful neatneſs of the principal ſtreets, which face towards the water. There were alſo about twenty ſmall veſſels lying before it, and the quay ſeemed to be wide enough to ſerve as a ſpacious terrace to the houſes. The prince's palace, an extenſive ſtone building, with a lofty orangery along the ſhore, is at the end of this ſtreet, which, as well as the greateſt part of the town, was built or improved under the auſpices of his father; a wiſe prince, diſtinguiſhed by having negotiated, in 1735, a peace between the empire and France, when the continuation of the war ſeemed to be inevitable. The ſame benevolence led him to a voluntary ſurrender of many oppreſſive privileges over his ſubjects, as well as to the moſt careful protection of commerce and manufactures. Accordingly, the town of Neuwied has been continually increaſing in proſperity and ſize for the laſt fifty years, and the inhabitants of the whole principality are ſaid to be as much more qualified in their characters as they are happier in their conditions than thoſe of the neighbouring ſtates: 4 miles below Cobleutz. Long. 25. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 29. N.—On the 21ſt of October, 1796, the Auſtrians were defeated by the French, at the bridge of this town, with the loſs of 4000 men.

NEW BANK, one of the banks called The Banks of Newfoundland: 2 leagues S. Cape Ballard.

NEW FOREST, a large tract of England, in the county of Hants, about 40 miles in circumference, which contained many populous towns and villages, and 36 mother-churches, till it was deſtroyed and turned into a foreſt, by William the Conqueror. King Henry VIII. built ſome caſtles in it, and it has now ſeveral towns and villages. It is ſituated in that part of Hampſhire which is bounded on the eaſt by Southampton river, and on the ſouth by the Britiſh Channel. It poſſeſſes advantages of ſituation, with reſpect to the convenience of water carriage and nearneſs to the dock-yards, ſuperior to every other foreſt, having in its neighbourhood ſeveral ports and places of ſhelter for ſhipping timber, among which Lymington is at the diſtance of only two miles, Bewley about half a mile, and Redbridge three or four miles from the foreſt; and the navigation to Portſmouth, the moſt conſiderable dock-yard in the kingdom, is only about 30 miles from the neareſt of thoſe places. This is the only foreſt belonging to the crown, of which the origin is known.

NEW HAVEN, or Newhaven, a town of England, in the county of Suſſex, ſituated on the Engliſh Channel, having a ſmall, but convenient harbour, at the mouth of the river Ouſe. There is a ſmall fort at the entrance, and above that is the town. It is a good haven for ſhips to run into when they are overtaken by tempeſtuous weather, as it poſſeſſes a good depth of water. This branch of the channel is navigable for ſmall craft up to the town of Lewes, by means of the river Ouſe, and the haven is generally made the ſtation of a ſmall ſloop of war, to intercept the ſmuggling trade, which ſome years ago was carried on to a very great extent on this coaſt: 7 miles S. Lewes, and 56 S. London.

NEW ISLAND, an iſland near the ſouthern extremity of South America: 7 leagues NE. Evout's Iſlands.

NEW RIVER, a river of United America, which riſes in the iron mountains, in the weſt part of North Carolina, and running to the Laurel Mountains, is then called The Kanhawa.

NEW RIVER, an artificial river or canal of England, which riſes from a reſervoir, near Ware, in the county of Hertford, and by means of embankments, arches, and other contrivances, is continued to another large reſervoir at Iſlington, for the purpoſe of ſupplying great part of the city of London with water.

NEW YEAR HARBOUR, a good harbour on the north coaſt of the iſland of Staten Land. Long. 64. 11. W. Greenwich. Lat. 54. 50. S.

NEW YEAR'S ISLANDS, ſome ſmall iſlands near New Year's Harbour, on the coaſt of Staten Land Iſland.

NEW YORK, ſee York.

NEWARK, a town of England, in the county of Nottingham, ſituated on the Trent, whoſe ſtream divides and forms it into an iſland, uniting again below the town. The chief trade is making malt. It is a corporation and a borough town, ſending two members to the Britiſh parliament. The market is on Wedneſday. A magnificent caſtle was built here, in the reign of king Stephen, which held out in the barons' wars for king John, who died here October 19, 1216; it alſo ſtood out for king Charles I. to the laſt; but after he put himſelf into the hands of the Scots' army, then before it, the governor, by his order, ſurrendered it, after which it was demoliſhed. Lime-ſtones abound within one mile of the town, from an eminence called Bacon Hill; and at the depth of twenty feet from its ſurface, is collected a curious ſtone, which is burned upon the brick-kilns, and afterwards ground into a very fine powder, and put into tubs and barrels, and ſent to the moſt diſtant parts, being a fine compoſition for ſtucco-works, ornaments for ceilings, &c. The town-hall is a magnificent ſtone building, built of the money left, by will, in eſtates, for the improvement of the town, &c. and coſt upwards of 10,000l.: 17½ miles SW. Lincoln, and 124 N. London.—On the 21ſt of March, 1644, a battle was fought near this town, between the royaliſts, under prince Rupert, and the parliament troops, commanded by ſir John Meldrum: the latter were compelled to capitulate and leave their baggage, fire-arms, ordnance, and ammunition, only marching away with their ſwords, drums, and colours.

NEWARK, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Jerſey: 63 miles NNE. Philadelphia. Long. 75. 12. W. Greenwich. Lat. 40. 32. N.

NEWBATTLE, a town of Scotland, in the county of Edinburgh; where is an abby, formerly belonging to Ciſtertian monks, now the ſeat of the marquis of Lothian: 1 mile S. Dalkeith.

NEWBERN, a town of United America, in the ſtate of North Carolina, on the ſouth ſide of the Neuſe. Long. 77. 20. W. Greenwich. Lat. 35. 17. N.

NEWBIGGIN, a fiſhing town of England, in the county of Northumberland, with a bay for ſhipping, ſecured from the ſtormy quarter by high rocks, capable of receiving veſſels of ſixty tons; the church ſtands on a point of land projecting a conſiderable diſtance into the ſea, and is a mark for ſeamen coming from the North and Baltic Seas, the depth of water in the bay is ſix or ſeven fathoms: 8 miles E. Morpeth, and 295 N. London. Lat. 55. 14. N.

NEWBORN, a village of Northumberland, once a place of note: in the year 1640, lord Conway, with an army of 3000 foot, and 1500 horſe, oppoſed the Scotch army, led by Leſley, but was defeated, with the loſs of 300 men: 6 miles W. Newcaſtle, and 272 N. London.

NEWBOROUGH, or Newburg, a town of the iſland of Angleſea with a weekly market on Tueſday. This town was anciently called Rhosvair, and was once the reſidence of the princes of Wales; and after it was conquered by the Engliſh, ſent repreſentatives to parliament, after changed to Beaumaris. It now is principally ſupported by making mats and ropes of ſea reed-graſs: 18½ miles SSE. Holyhead, and 257 NW. London.

NEWBOROUGH, or Gorey, a town of Ireland, in the county of Wexford, which ſends two members to the Iriſh parliament: 21 miles N. Wexford, and 39 S. Dublin.

NEWBURGH, a town of Scotland, in the county of Fife, ſituated on the ſouth ſide of the Tay, containing about 1550 ſouls: 6 miles N. Falkland, and 8 SE. Perth.

NEWBURN, a town of Scotland, in the county of Fife: 8 miles SSW. St. Andrews.

NEWBURY, a town of England, in the county of Berks; ſituated on the river Kennet, which is made navigable to Reading; and a little below it joins the Thames. Newburgh is ſaid to have flouriſhed on the decay of Speen, which now appears as a ſuburb. In the reign of Henry VIII. it was greatly celebrated for its manufacture of cloth. Orman John Winchcomb, called Jack of Newbury, employed 100 looms in his own houſe; and in the expedition of Flodden-field, marched againſt the Scots, with his men, armed and clothed at his own expence. Newbury is a town of conſiderable trade, with a large weekly market on Thurſday. Near this town were two obſtinate battles fought, at different times, between the royaliſts and the forces of the parliament, king Charles being preſent at them both; and both were fought almoſt upon the ſame ſpot of ground: the firſt on the 20th of September, 1643, and the other on the 27th of October, 1644. In the firſt of theſe battles the ſucceſs was doubtful, and both ſides claimed the advantage; in the laſt the king's army had apparently the worſt of it: 51 miles E. Bath, and 56 W. London.

NEWBURY, a county of the ſtate of South Carolina.

NEWBURY PORT, a ſeaport of United America, in the ſtate of Maſſachuſetts. The commerce with the Weſt India Iſlands is very conſiderable. Some veſſels are employed in the freighting buſineſs, and a few in the fiſhery. In November, 1790, there were owned in this port 6 ſhips, 45 brigantines, 39 ſchooners, and 28 ſloops; in the whole 11,870 tons. A term of the courts of common pleas and general ſeſſions is held here on the laſt Tueſday in September: 30 miles N. Boſton. Long. 70. 52. W. Greenwich. Lat. 42. 48. N.

NEWCASTLE, a county of the ſtate of Delaware, in United America.

NEWCASTLE, or Newcaſtle's Emlyn, a town of Wales, in the county of Caermarthen, on the Towy; with a weekly market on Friday: 15 miles NW. Caermarthen, and 219 W. London.

NEWCASTLE, a town of Ireland, in the county of Dublin, which ſends two members to the Iriſh parliament: 10 miles WSW. Dublin.

NEWCASTLE, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Delaware, on the weſt bank of the Delaware river. It was firſt ſettled by the Swedes, about the year 1627, and called Stockholm. It was afterwards taken by the Dutch, and called New Amſterdam. When it fell into the hands of the Engliſh, it was called by its preſent name. It was formerly the ſeat of government. This is the firſt town that was ſettled on Delaware river: 30 miles SSW. Philadelphia. Long. 75. 35. W. Greenwich. Lat. 39. 42. N.

NEWCASTLE, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Virginia, on the York River: 18 miles N. Richmond.

NEWCASTLE, a town on the north coaſt of the iſland of Nevis: 6 miles NNE. Charleſtown.

NEWCASTLE BAY, a large open bay of the Pacific Ocean, on the north-eaſt coaſt of New Holland, in which are ſome ſmall low iſlands and ſhoals: ſouth of York Cape.

NEWCASTLE UNDER LINE, a town of England, in the county of Stafford, ſituated on a branch of the Trent; firſt incorporated by Henry I. and laſt by king Charles II. under whoſe charter it is governed by a mayor, two juſtices, &c. Here is a conſiderable manufacture of cloth; but hat-making is the chief buſineſs. Here is a weekly market on Monday. It is a borough town, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. In the neighbourhohd are abundance of coal-pits, and many manufactures of ſtone-ware, ſo that it is ſuppoſed the quantity annually ſold amounts, on an average, to the ſum of 100,000l.: 35 miles SE. Cheſter, and 149 NNW. London.

NEWCASTLE UPON TYNE, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Northumberland, ſituated on the north ſide of the river Tyne, with an excellent harbour, to which ſhips of 400 tons may come up with ſafety; larger veſſels generally ſtop at Shields. It is a very ancient town, ſuppoſed by Camden to have been called Gabroſentum by the Romans. It was begun to be fortified in the reign of Edward I. and completed in the reign of Edward III; the wall is rather more than two miles in circumference, and was defended by towers: it had ſeven gates. The caſtle was built by Robert Carthouſe, ſon of William the conqueror. It was repaired by king John, who added a ditch to the fortifications. In the year 1737, the ſite and demeſnes of the caſtle were granted to George Lyddel, eſq. for fifty years, rent 100 chaldron of coals, for Greenwich Hoſpital. The town has four pariſhes, and is governed by a mayor, ſheriff, and twelve aldermen, and ſends two members to parliament, being one of the firſt boroughs ſummoned to ſend repreſentatives, in the 10th year of Edward I. 1283. The trade of this town is very great: the exports principally coals, wrought iron, lead, glaſs, ſalt, bacon, corn, ſalmon, butter, tallow, and grindſtones. This town was taken by David I. king of Scotland, in 1135, but ſoon after reſtored to king Stephen. In the year 1209, a conference was held here between king John of England, and William the Lion, king of Scotland; and another, in 1235 or 1236, between the king of England, and Alexander, king of Scotland. In 1292, Baliol did homage here to Edward I. In 1346, Newcaſtle furniſhed ſeventeen ſhips and 314 mariners for the ſiege of Calais. In the year 1643, the Scotch laid ſiege to it, under the command of Leſley, and was the year following, taken by ſtorm. Sir

John Marley, the mayor, retired to the caſtle, with 500 men, and held out till terms of capitulation were obtained. The inhabitants ſaved the town by paying a ſum of money. The parliament disfranchiſed the corporation, and ordered the mayor to be tried by a court martial. In the reign of Henry III. 1249, the town ſuffered very much by a fire. In the year 1553, an act of parliament decreed, that there ſhould be no more than four taverns or wine-ſellers to ſell wine by retail in Newcaſtle. A battle is ſaid, by Froiſart, to have been fought here between the Scotch, under the earl of Douglas, and the Engliſh, under the two ſons of the earl of Northumberland, in which the latter were victorious. The exports from Newcaſtle, in 1776, were 27,814 chaldrons of coals, 24,960 cwt. of lead, 171 cwt. of lead ſhot, 4619 cwt. of white glaſs, 8982 cwt. 2 qrs. green glaſs, 160 cwt. bar iron, 32$\frac{1}{4}$ cwt. wrought iron, 47$\frac{3}{4}$ cwt. ſteel, 6 cwt. rice, 900lb. gunpowder, 1760lb. haberdaſhery, 657 gallons of ale, 34,850 pieces of earthen-ware, 60 reams of paper, 100 muſquets, 10,000 gunflints, 144 looking-glaſſes, 1681 grindſtones, 138 cwt. of tow, 2354lb. of worſted ſtuffs, 4166lbs. of flour-muſtard, 251 dozen rubſtones, 200 yards of ſilk gauze, 881 yards velverets, 3980 yards coloured woollen cloths, 42,000 bricks, 25,000 pantiles, 1466 cwt. litharge, 2149$\frac{1}{2}$ cwt. copperas, 60l. value ſadler's ware, 80l. ditto houſehold furniture, 4 flagſtones, 1238 quarters of wheat, 244 quarters of foreign ditto, 529 quarters wheat flour, 38 tons 10 cwt. biſcuit bread, 46$\frac{1}{4}$ cwt. cordage, 20$\frac{1}{4}$ cwt. butter, 147 fireſtones, 16 cwt. hams, 139 tons of ſalt, and ſundry other articles, all in Britiſh bottoms: from the year 1785 to 1791, the coals ſent from this port amounted to 448,000 chaldrons. Here are two markets, weekly, on Tueſday and Saturday: 14 miles N. Durham, 107 S. Edinburgh, and 271 N. London. Long. 1. 26. W. Greenwich. Lat. 55. 1. N.

NEWELL, a town of Lithuania, in the palatinate of Brzeſc: 24 miles SW. Pinſk.

NEWENBERG, a town of Germany, in the county of Feldkirch: 3 miles NW. Feldkirch.

NEWENT, a town of England, in the county of Glouceſter, ſituated in the foreſt of Dean, on a river which runs into the Severn, navigable for boats. In this pariſh ſome valuable mines of coal have been lately diſcovered, and an act of parliament has been recently obtained for making a navigable canal from hence to Hereford, &c. The beds of coal appear to be of great magnitude, and the ore of excellent quality. Here is a market on Friday: 9 miles NW. Glouceſter, and 114 W. London.

NEWFOUNDLAND, an iſland in the North Atlantic Ocean, ſeparated from the continent of North America by the Straits of Belliſle and the Gulf of St. Lawrence, of a triangular form, and, without including the bendings of the coaſt, about 900 miles in circumference; firſt diſcovered by Sebaſtian Cabot, in the year 1497. In the reign of Henry VIII two Engliſhmen, of the name of Elliot and Thorn, traded thither, with leave from the crown, and to ſuch advantage, that Mr. Hare, a gentleman of eminence in the mercantile way, propoſed the ſcheme of making a ſettlement, and perſuaded ſeveral of his friends to aſſiſt him in the execution. The expedition was extremely unfortunate; the adventurers were reduced to ſuch wretchedneſs, through famine, that they are reported to have devoured each other. For ſome years all thoughts of proſecuting the diſcovery were relinquiſhed by the Engliſh, in conſequence of which intermiſſion the French and Portugueſe contrived to gain a footing on the iſland, and to carry on a profitable trade in fiſh and furs. In 1579, Mr. Cotton, a merchant of Southampton, employed captain Whitburn, in a ſhip of 300 tons, to fiſh for cod on the great bank, but the exceſs of cold obliged him to put into Trinity Harbour, where he exerted himſelf ſo diligently, that with fiſh and other commodities, he cleared the expences of the voyage. The ſame officer was again employed by Mr. Crook, a merchant of Southampton, to repeat the voyage; and during his reſidence in Newfoundland, ir Humphry Gilbert arrived, with a ſmall ſquadron of two ſhips and a innace, with a commiſſion from queen Elizabeth, to take poſſeſſion of the ſland for the crown; though he was afterwards obliged to evacuate it, nd ſail for England in the following year; but did not reach it, periſhing n a ſtorm. In the year 1622, the Engliſh again returned to ſettle in this ſland, under the conduct of Mr. George Calvert, who, with more foreght than his predeceſſor, brought with him all kinds of ſeeds, grain, and ulſe, and immediately ſet his followers to work in clearing thoſe parts hich ſeemed beſt adapted to culture: and, accordingly, the produce of is ſeeds contributed greatly to the comfortable ſubſiſtence of theſe new dventurers, beſides affording a ſtock for the enſuing years. The French ad for a long time been in poſſeſſion of Placentia, and with it of the rincipal part of this iſland; but without any moleſtation to the ſettleents of the Engliſh on the eaſtern coaſts of it; and the veſſels of both ations quietly fiſhed together. The Engliſh, however, long entertained a eſire of making themſelves maſters of Placentia, as the only fortified wn in the iſland, as alſo of the whole ſouthern part held by the French. They had tried force and negociations to compaſs their ends; but all their ndeavours ended in diſappointment, till the peace of Utrecht, concluded twixt that nation and Louis XIV. of France; when they took advantage the low ſtate to which that monarch was reduced, and inſiſted on the tire and abſolute ceſſion of Newfoundland; and ever ſince that time no other nation has ſettled there; though with a reſerve of the right of cod-fiſhing both to the French and Spaniards. The country is very unequal, and covered with hills and mountains, which appear more lofty in the interior parts than near the coaſt. They are every where overgrown with pines, ſo as to be practicable only in thoſe parts where the inhabitants have cut roads. This ſpecies of pine ſeldom exceeds the height of 12 or 18 feet in the open parts; but in vallies, where they are ſheltered from the froſt and the piercing winds, they riſe to a much greater height. In winter, the cold is exceſſive here, nothing but ſnow and ice being ſeen, and the bays and harbours entirely frozen. The whole circuit of the iſland is full of bays and harbours, all ſo ſpacious and ſheltered on all ſides by the mountains, except their entrance, that the veſſels lie in perfect ſecurity; they all grow gradually narrower from their entrance, that at the end of them there is ſcarce room for a ſingle veſſel to anchor. Some of theſe harbours are a league and a half or two leagues in length, and their greateſt breadth about half a league. But there are alſo others much larger, and ſome leſs: into them run ſeveral rivers and brooks, which, beſides the fineneſs of their water, afford great quantities of trouts and other kinds of freſh-water fiſh; ſeeming to vie with the ſea in fecundity. Theſe harbours are complete anchoring places, being clear, and having a good bottom, that they may be ſafely ſailed into without a pilot. Some there are with reefs of rocks, but theſe are generally viſible; and thoſe that are covered, are uſually about the capes or points at the entrance of the harbours: and, therefore, by keeping in the middle, all the danger is avoided. Theſe harbours are ſo near each other, as to be only ſeparated by a point of land, which ſeldom forms a diſtance of above two leagues, ſo that the whole coaſt of the iſland is a ſucceſſion of harbours. But it is not in all that the Engliſh have any town or village; and theſe, which are to be found only on the larger bays, and where the nature and diſpoſition of the country are moſt convenient for a ſettlement, are ſmall, and the inhabitants but few. Cod-fiſhing is the univerſal buſineſs, and beſides their dwellings, they have offices and ſtorehouſes for preparing and laying up their fiſh, till the time arrives for ſending it into Europe, on their own account, or ſelling it to veſſels which come there to purchaſe it in exchange for European goods. None of theſe villages are without a fort or battery for their ſecurity in time of war; but theſe are ſo inſignificant, that the moſt they could do would be to drive away ſome petty privateer. But the ſettlements of the Engliſh are only about the harbours, and in the country near Placentia, and along its bays eaſtward towards Cape Raze, and from thence to Cape Buena Viſta: all the remainder, both up the country and along the coaſt, northwards towards the ſtraits, and from thence weſtward, is entirely deſert. This muſt, however, be imputed to the rigour of the climate, and the badneſs of the ſoil, more than to any neglect of the proprietors, who ſeldom are wanting in induſtry, when they have a probability of ſuitable advantages. The inhabitants relate, that it was formerly peopled by a race of ſavage Indians, who ſince have retired to the continent; nor do they often viſit the iſland, and even when they do, they ſtay but a very ſmall time, returning to the continent from whence they came. This was, indeed, their cuſtom, before ever the names of the French or Engliſh were known in the iſland. They are not without ſome horned cattle; but theſe are preſerved with great care and difficulty. The inhabitants have alſo their little kitchen gardens for ſummer herbs; but all other ſpecies of proviſions, as flour, ſalt-meat, &c. they are ſupplied with from England and the continent of America. With regard to the goods of other kinds, they are brought from England. In the year 1785, 292 Britiſh fiſhing veſſels and 85 Britiſh trading ſhips carried off 591,276 quintals of fiſh for foreign markets: and 14,000 ſeamen were ſaid to be employed in theſe fiſheries, in the year 1787. The principal towns are Placentia, St. John's, and Bonaviſta. Long. 52. to 59. W. Greenwich. Lat. 46. 40. to 51. 40. N.

NEWHAVEN, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Vermont: 145 miles NNW. Boſton, and 75 N. Bennington. Long. 73. 8. W. Greenwich. Lat. 44. 6. N.

NEWHAVEN, a ſea-port town of United America, in the ſtate of Connecticut, ſituated at the bottom of a bay, in Long Iſland Sound, called, Newhaven Harbour. Two ſmall rivers bound it eaſt and weſt. The town was originally laid out in ſquares of 60 rods. Many of the ſquares have been divided by croſs ſtreets. It carries on a conſiderable trade with New York and the Weſt India iſlands, has ſeveral kinds of manufactures, and is flouriſhing: 100 miles SW. Boſton, and 62 NE. New York. Long. 72. 53. W. Greenwich. Lat. 41. 6. N.

NEWHAVEN, a river of United America, which runs into the Otter Creek: 5 miles S. Newhaven, in the ſtate of Vermont.

NEWINGTON, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Georgia: 5 miles NW. Savanna.

NEWLAND, a ſmall iſland, near the north-weſt coaſt of the county of Cornwall, at the mouth of the river Alan: 4 miles below Padſtow.

NEWMAN, a town of United America, in the ſtate of South Carolina: 41 miles NNE. Charleſtown.

NEWMARKET, a town of England, in the county of Cambridge, on the borders of Norfolk, chiefly celebrated for horſe-races, being the firſt meeting in the kingdom. It has two markets weekly, on Tueſday and Thurſday: 13 miles NE. Cambridge, and 60 N. London.

NEWMARKET, a town of North Wales, in the county of Flint: 4 miles NE. St. Aſaph.

NEWNHAM, a town of England, in the county of Glouceſter, on the Severn; with a weekly market on Friday. Here is ſaid to have been the firſt fortification erected againſt the Welch: 12 miles SW. Glouceſter, and 112 W. London.

NEWPORT, a town of England, in the county of Salop, with a weekly market on Saturday: 41 miles SE. Cheſter, and 140 NW. London.

NEWPORT, a borough of England, in the county of Cornwall. This is only a ſmall village, and was formerly a part of Launceſton, to which it joins, but ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament.

NEWPORT, a town of England, in the Iſle of Wight, and county of Hants. It is a borough town, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament, and has two markets weekly, on Wedneſday and Saturday. In the year 1648, a treaty was entered into here, between king Charles I. and the commiſſioners from the parliament: 6 miles S. Cowes, and 92 SSW. London.

NEWPORT, a town of England, in the county of Monmouth, on the river Uſk: about four miles from its mouth. It is walled round, and was formerly defended by a caſtle; conſiderable remains of which are yet in being. Near it are the veſtiges of a camp: 12 miles NE. Cardiff, and 152 W. London.

NEWPORT, a ſea-port town of United America, in the ſtate of Rhode Iſland. This town was firſt ſettled by Mr. William Coddington, afterwards governor and the father of Rhode Iſland, with ſeventeen others, in 1639. Its harbour, which is one of the fineſt in the world, ſpreads weſtward before the town. The entrance is eaſy and ſafe, and a large fleet may anchor in it, and ride in perfect ſecurity. The town lies north and ſouth, upon a gradual aſcent, as you proceed eaſtward from the water, and exhibits a beautiful view from the harbour, and from the neighbouring hills, which lies weſtward upon the Main. Weſt of the town is Goat Iſland, on which is a fort. Between this iſland and the town is the harbour. Newport contained, in the year 1790, about 1000 houſes, but chiefly of wood, and 5530 inhabitants. It has nine houſes for public worſhip; three for Baptiſts, two for Congregationaliſts, one for Epiſcopalians, one for Quakers, one for Moravians, and a ſynagogue for the Jews. The other public buildings are, a ſtate-houſe, and an edifice for the public library. The ſituation, form, and architecture of the ſtate-houſe, gives it the preference to moſt public buildings in America. It ſtands ſufficiently elevated, and a long wharf, and paved parade lead up to it from the harbour. The building for the library conſiſts of one large room, thirty-ſix feet long, twenty-ſix feet broad, and nineteen feet high, where the books are kept, with two ſmall offices adjoining. In the year 1747, Abraham Redwood, eſq. gave 1294 volumes, valued at 500l. ſterling, as the foundation of a library. This elegant building is now much out of repair, and one-third of the books in the library, were either carried off, or deſtroyed by the Britiſh, during the war: 20 miles SSW. Providence. Long. 71. 15. W. Greenwich. Lat. 41. 25 N.

NEWPORT PAGNEL, a town of England, in the county of Bucks, on a ſmall river which ſoon after runs into the Ouſe: conſiderable for its manufacture of lace, for the ſale of which here is a market weekly on Wedneſday, beſides another on Saturday for corn and proviſions: 15 miles SSE. Northampton, and 51 NNW. London.

NEWPORT PRATT, a ſea-port town of Ireland, in the county of Mayo, ſituated on a river, which runs into Clew Bay, near its mouth: 8 miles W. Caſtlebar. Long. 9. 21. W. Greenwich. Lat. 53. 53. N.

NEWRY, a ſea-port town of Ireland, on a river of the ſame name, which runs into Carlingford Bay; veſſels carrying 200 tons can come up to the town, and by means of a canal from Newry to the river Ban, an inland navigation is open for veſſels of 70 tons' burthen. Here is a very conſiderable linen manufacture, and conſiderable trade in ſhipping. In the year 1689, this town was burned by the duke of Berwick. It ſends two members to the Iriſh parliament: 30 miles SSW. Belfaſt, and 49 N. Dublin. Long. 6. 16. W. Greenwich. Lat. 54. 9. N.

NICARAGUA, a province of North America, in Mexico, bounded on the north by Honduras, on the eaſt by the North Sea, on the ſouth by Coſta Rica, and the Pacific Ocean, and on the weſt by Guatimala, and the Pacific Ocean. The winter in this province is rainy, and tempeſtuous; the ſummer exceſſively hot, but healthy. It is reckoned the moſt woody part of New Spain. It produces good flax and hemp, together with the wood uſed by the dyers in Europe, called Nicaragua-wood; but little wheat. It abounds with black cattle and hogs, but ſheep are ſcarce. Balm, cotton, ſugar, American pepper, liquid amber, and turpentine, are here produced in very great plenty; with which, and the produce of their ſilver mines, the inhabitants carry on a conſiderable trade with Panama, and Nombre de Dios. It abounds in turkeys; and parrots were ſo numerous, that they became a nuiſance. The country itſelf is ſo pleaſant, as well as fruitful, that it is conſidered as the garden of America; the hills and ſands of the rivers abound with gold, and the fields and woods are perfumed with odoriferous plants and flowers; ſo that when the Spaniards firſt viſited it, they called it Mahomet's Paradiſe.

NICARAGUA, a town of North America, in the province of the ſame name, ſituated on the ſouth ſide of the lake ſo called, not far from the Pacific Ocean. Long. 68. 16. W. Ferro. Lat. 11. 22. N.

NICARAGUA, a lake of North America, in Mexico, and province of the ſame name, 100 leagues in circumference. The water in it flows and ebbs like the ſea, is interſperſed with ſeveral iſlands, and full of fiſh, but infeſted with crocodiles. The weſt end of it is only a few leagues from the South Sea, and it falls into the North Sea, at the port of St. Juan, by a pretty broad channel, called alſo Nicaragua.

NICARIA, an iſland in the Grecian Archipelago, 18 miles long, and 3 wide, anciently called Icaria, and the ſea between it and Mycone, the Icarian Sea, from Icarus, the ſon of Dedalus: about 9 leagues ENE. Mycone. Long. 44. E. Ferro. Lat. 37. 45. N.

NICAUAR, a town of the iſland of Ceylon: 50 miles SW. Trinkomaly.

NICCA, a town of the iſland of Cherſo, in the Adriatic: 20 miles W. Cherſo.

NICE (County of), a county ſituated on the frontiers of Italy and France. It made, anciently, a part of Narbonne Gaul, and, in after times, a part of the county of Provence; from which it was ſeparated, and united to the county of Savoy, in 1388; which was farther confirmed and ratified by Louis III. king of Naples, as count of Provence, in the year

1419. Moſt geographers place it in Italy; but, ſurely if the Alps be the boundary of ſeparation between Gaul and Italy, that cannot be juſt, as the county of Nice is ſituated on the contrary ſide of the Alps, from Italy; the county, including the counties of Tenda, and Beuil, and principality of Barcelonetta, extends ninety miles from north to ſouth; and is bounded on the north by the marquiſate of Saluzzo, on the eaſt by Piedmont, on the ſouth by the Mediterranean, and on the weſt by Provence. The immediate county of Nice is bounded by the marquiſate of Saluzzo, the county of Tenda, the eſtates of Genoa, the Mediterranean, Provence, and county of Beuil, and includes two towns, viz. Nice, and Ville Franche.

NICE, a city, ſeaport, and capital of a county, of the ſame name, ſituated on a ſharp rock, on the coaſt of the Mediterranean, at the mouth of the river Paglion, or Paulon, and about half a league from the mouth of the Var; founded by the Phocians, after they had built Marſeilles, about 500 years before Chriſt, on their return from an expedition againſt the Salij, and the Ligurians: and, named Nicea, i. e. victory. At this time, it is much declined from its ancient ſplendour, having ſuffered greatly by war, being in the paſſage of the armies from France to Italy. It ſuffered exceedingly in the year 1543, when the army of Francis I. beſieged it by land, and the Turkiſh fleet, under Barbaroſſa, preſſed on it by ſea. It was taken, pillaged, and nearly reduced to aſhes. It is defended by a ſtrong citadel, built on a rock, and fortified with a wall and ditch towards the weſt. It is the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of the archbiſhop of Embrun. Nice was anciently ſubject to the counts of Provence, kings of Naples. In the quarrel between Ladiſlaus, and Louis II. the inhabitants took part with the houſe of Duras, againſt the duke of Anjou: after about ſix years, Ladiſlaus permitted them to place themſelves under the protection of what prince they choſe, except only the duke of Anjou. In conſequence of this liberty, they took the oath of fidelity to Amadeus VII. count of Savoy, in 1388. The government is a ſpecies of democracy; the inhabitants are divided into four claſſes, the nobles, the merchants, the artiſans, and the huſbandmen, each claſs electing yearly a conſul, and ten counſellors. It had formerly large ſuburbs, but only ruins now remain. Beſides the cathedral, there are three parochial, and ſeveral other churches, and monaſteries. In the year 1792, the French general Anſelm croſſed the Var; and on the 29th of September, being ſupported by admiral Truguet with nine ſail of the line, took poſſeſſion of Nice, which was evacuated by the Piedmonteſe garriſon, on the appearance of the French, and the inhabitants appeared diſpoſed, in every reſpect, cordially to unite with the French Republic; for, in the month of September, 1793, when an Engliſh veſſel arrived at Nice with a flag of truce, and a proclamation to the inhabitants, exhorting them to accept the royal conſtitution of 1789; the magiſtrates of Nice replied, "that French republicans would never become ſlaves, and that no farther anſwer would be made to royaliſts, except from the mouths of cannon:" 125¾ poſts SSE. Paris. Long. 25. E. Ferro. Lat. 43. 41. N.—This city and territory are now united to France.

NICOSIA, a town and capital of the iſland of Cyprus, ſituated in the centre of the iſland, in the middle of a vaſt plain; and ſurrounded by hills and mountains, which bound it on all ſides, at the diſtance of ten miles. From the time of Conſtantine the Great, till 1567, the circumference of this city was nine miles, but the Venetians found it too extenſive; and reduced it to three, becauſe they thought that this would render the conqueſt of it leſs eaſy. They fortified it alſo with eleven baſtions, and three gates; all the reſt they razed to the foundation, nothing was reſpected; they even demoliſhed temples, palaces, and the moſt beautiful monuments; and the gloomy policy of theſe people ſoon reduced it to a heap of ruins. There are ſtill to be ſeen here, the foundations of a citadel, erected by king James, the firſt of the Luſignans; and the remains of a convential church, dedicated to St. Dominic, in which are buried ſeveral ſovereigns; and, among others, Hugo IV. to whom Boccace dedicated his book on the genealogy of the gods. The city of Nicoſia, under the family of the Luſignans, was the reſidence of the kings, and the ſee of an archbiſhop, erected by Innocent III. in the year 1212, at the requeſt of Aliſia, wife to Hugo, firſt king of Cyprus. It contained a great many monaſteries, three hundred churches, Greek and Latin, and a number of palaces and public buildings. The city of Nicoſia, and a great part of the kingdom, was, in the fifteenth century, in the hands of the Saracens. The king of Cyprus was carried priſoner to Egypt, and though his liberty and his crown were both reſtored to him, he remained tributary to the conqueror. The Porte having afterwards triumphed over the ſultan, the kings of Cyprus ceaſed to pay tribute to the ſovereign of Egypt, only to make the ſame acknowledgment to the grand ſignior; and this he continued to do, till the iſland was taken by the Venetians. The year 1570, was fatal to the city of Nicoſia, and to the whole iſland. Selim II. who then ruled the Ottoman empire, projected the conqueſt of Cyprus. In the month of June, of the ſame year, Muſtapha, the Turkiſh general, entered it at the head of 100,000 infantry, and 10,000 horſe. The neighbourhood of Nicoſia was laid waſte with fire and ſword; and on the 26th of July, a memorable ſiege was commenced, which continued forty-five days: at length reduced to the greateſt extremity, the city was taken by a general aſſault, on Sunday, the 9th of September. Of 50,000 people, who had retired within the walls for ſhelter, 20,000 were maſſacred, and the reſt put in irons. On the ramparts, there are different pieces of ordnance ornamented with the arms of the republic of Venice. When the city was taken, they found in it 250 cannons; they likewiſe brought ſome along with them; and the reſt were formed of the bells of the churches. This numerous artillery, however is far from being formidable, as it is in very bad order. The moſt beautiful edifice here, is the church of St. Sophia, where the kings of Cyprus were formerly crowned. The church of St. Nicholas is at preſent the beſiſten, a kind of hall where all ſorts of proviſions are ſold. The principal Turkiſh, Greek, and Armenian merchants, aſſemble here to tranſact commercial buſineſs. The bazar, or market-place, is extenſive and lively, well ſupplied with proviſions, and remarkably clean. Long. 51. 12. E. Ferro. Lat. 35. 12. N.

NIEUPORT, a ſea-port town of Flanders, whoſe ancient name was Santhooſt, but changed it when Philip comte of Flanders, built a new harbour, in the year 1168: it lies near the ſea-ſhore, on a branch of the river Yperlee, which, joining with the river Colme, forms a canal, which runs into the ſea. The harbour is dry at low water. The principal defence of the place conſiſts in its ſluices, by which they can lay all the country under water. In the year 1383, the town was burned by the rebels of Ghent. In 1488, it ſuſtained a ſiege againſt Philip, duke of Cleves, in which the women ſhowed a wonderful degree of courage. It took part in the revolt of the Netherlands, but was reduced in the year 1583, by the prince of Parma. On the 22d of July, in the year 1600, a famous battle was fought here between the archduke Albert, and prince Maurice of Naſſau, who commanded the army of the States, then beſieging the place; the Spaniards loſt 130 ſtandards and colours, 600 priſoners, and 2000 men killed in the field of battle. The prince of Orange, at the commencement of the battle, ordered his fleet to ſtand out to ſea, to ſhow his ſoldiers that their ſafety depended on their courage; he alſo commanded his brother, prince Frederick, to retire on board the fleet, that he might not at one time expoſe two perſons of ſo much conſequence to the States-General, but this the young prince obſtinately refuſed, being reſolved to ſhare with his brother the glory and the danger. In the year 1706, field-mareſchal Owerkercke, general of the Dutch troops, preſented himſelf before this city, on the 17th of June, with an intent to beſiege it, but finding the enterprize too difficult, he decamped on the 19th, and went to attack Oſtend. After the peace was concluded at Utrecht, in the year 1713, between France and England, the French ceded Nieuport to the Engliſh, who, in the year 1715, ſurrendered it to his imperial and catholic majeſty, Charles VI. It was again taken by the French, in the year 1745, and reſtored at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle. Before the French revolution, here was a convent of Engliſh Chartreux, founded in the year 1415, at Shene, by Henry V. and, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, removed, firſt to Malines, and at laſt eſtabliſhed at Nieuport, in the year 1626. The inhabitants are principally fiſhermen, and the chief trade making nets, and cordage for veſſels: 9 miles SW. Oſtend, and 20 NW. Ypres. Long. 20. 19. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 7. N.

NIKIOPING, or Nykoping, i. e. New Mart, a ſea-port town of Sweden, and capital of the province of Sudermanland, ſituated at the mouth of a river, near the Baltic. It is a well-built ſtaple town, and one of the moſt ancient cities in the kingdom of Sweden, and was formerly the reſidence of the kings and princes of Sudermanland. The air is ſo temperate and ſalubrious, that in times of a contagion, the royal family, and the ſeveral boards and offices have frequently removed from Stockholm to this place. Its inhabitants are above 1200 ſouls; and the city is divided into two (nearly equal) parts; by a large river, over which a ſtone bridge was built, in the year 1728. Nikioping was almoſt conſumed by fire, in 1661, and ſuffered extremely by the ravages of the Ruſſians, in 1719. Here was formerly a very ancient caſtle, demoliſhed in 1665. The kings of Sudermanland reſided in it, and it was ſo ſtrongly fortified, that it was accounted little inferior to thoſe of Stockholm and Calmar. It has two handſome churches, a commodious harbour, ſeveral manufactories of cloth and Morocco leather, a braſs hammer-mill, and drives a conſiderable trade by ſea. Its chief magiſtrates are, two burgo-maſters. The governor of Sudermanland alſo reſides in a palace in this city. The Swediſh language is ſuppoſed to be ſpoken in its greateſt purity at Nikioping, and its environs. Without this town is a royal incloſure; and the adjacent country is extremely fertile: 50 miles SW. Stockholm. Long. 16. 53. E. Greenwich. Lat. 58. 45. N.

NILAB, a name given to the river Indus or Sinde.

NILE, a river of Africa, which riſes in the mountains of Abyſſinia, called the Mountains of the Moon, near the village of Geeſh, in Long. 36. 55. E. Greenwich. Lat. 10. 59. N. After a variety of turnings and windings, it paſſes through the lake of Dembea, leaves Abyſſinia, croſſes the country of Nubia, and enters Egypt at Syene; waſhing the walls of many cities and towns, and being joined by innumerable rivers, great and ſmall, in its courſe. After paſſing through Egypt, which country it divides in two parts, it empties itſelf by ſeven mouths into the Mediterranean, in Lat. 31. 25. N. To the overflowing of this river, Egypt is indebted for its fertility: the Nile's increaſe, occaſioned by the torrents of rain which fall yearly in Abyſſinia, is not much perceived till the ſummer ſolſtice; when the waters become troubled, of a reddiſh tincture, and are thought unwholeſome. They muſt be purified before drank; which is done by mixing bitter almonds, pounded to duſt, in a jar full of water, and kept turning, with the arm, for ſome minutes: it is then left to ſettle; and in five or ſix hours, the heterogeneous particles ſubſide to the bottom of the veſſel, and the water becomes limpid and excellent. The Nile continues increaſing, till near the end of Auguſt, and often even in September. The Nilometer, at Elephantina, formerly denoted to what degree the inundation would riſe. The experience of ages had afforded marks known to thoſe whoſe truſt it was to watch. The governors of the provinces were inſtantly informed, and the neceſſary labours for the good of agriculture, were regulated accordingly. When the Arabs conquered Egypt, the Nilometer was at the ſmall town of Halovan, facing Memphis. Amrou deſtroyed that ſtately capital. Some ages after, the mekias or Nilometer, was built at one extremity of the iſland of Raouda, and the column to meaſure the water was erected in the centre of a low chamber, the walls of which are exceedingly ſolid, and the bottom on a level with the bed of the Nile. The mekias has never ſince been changed, and officers are now appointed to examine the progreſs of the inundations, which is daily proclaimed in the ſtreets of Cairo, by the public criers, to whom the people intereſted in the event, give ſome ſlight reward, and it becomes the news of the day. As Egypt pays no tribute to the grand ſeignior, if the waters do not riſe to ſixteen cubits, the Egyptians often diſguiſe the truth, and do not proclaim they have riſen to that height till they have ſurpaſſed it. The day of this proclamation is a day of rejoicing, and a ſolemn feaſt among the Egyptians.

NIMBURG, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Boleſlaw, near the Elbe. In the year 1634, the Saxon troops took this town by aſſault: 14 miles SSE. Jung Buntzel, 70 SE. Dreſden, and 26 ENE. Prague.

NIMECK, a town of Germany, in the circle and electorate of Saxony: 20 miles NE. Wittemburg.

NIMEGUEN, or Nimmegen, a very ancient, rich, ſtrong, and populous city, ſituated on the ſouth ſide of the Wahal. It is ſaid to have taken its name from Magus, king of the Gauls. It is the capital of the Lower Guelderland, and was anciently the capital of the whole duchy; it is alſo the chief town of Betuwe, or Batavia, the country of the ancient Batavi, ſo frequently mentioned in the Roman hiſtory. It has thirteen gates, and is defended by an ancient fortreſs called Vlack-Hof, ſuppoſed to have been built about the time of Julius Cæſar; and ſeveral other fortifications. It was anciently a free city. The emperor Charlemagne having rebuilt the caſtle in the year 775, made Nimmegen the ſecond imperial city of Lower Germany: Aix-la-Chapelle being the firſt, and Thionville the third. William III. king of the Romans, ſeparated it from the empire, and united it to the comté of Holland, in the year 1248; but being in want of money, he ſold it, in 1270, with its territory, for twenty-one thouſand marks of ſilver, to Otho III. comte of Gueldres, whoſe ſucceſſors remained maſters till the States of Holland revolted againſt the king of Spain. Notwithſtanding it is ſeparated from the empire, it pays a ſmall tribute, which is, according to Guicciardin, to ſend yearly to Aix-la-Chapelle a glove filled with pepper; but Frederic Sanders reports it in another manner, and aſſerts the inhabitants of Nimmegen are free from all cuſtoms on the Meuſe, particularly at Liege, on condition that they ſend, on the firſt Sunday after Eaſter, a pair of buckſkin gloves, with two pounds of pepper; this was neglected for ſeveral years, and was renewed under Arnold de Horn, biſhop of Liege, who died in the year 1388. In the year 1585, the citizens took arms againſt the garriſon of Hollanders, and drove them away from the town, being reſolved to defend themſelves: but the ſame year, the Chevalier Martin Schenck attempted to ſurpriſe it. He had entered the city with his troops in the night of the 11th of Auguſt, and had nearly become maſters of the place, when the inhabitants, recovering from their conſternation, repulſed them, with the loſs of 500 men: the reſt retired in ſuch confuſion that they were moſt of them driven into the river, and drowned; the inhabitants drew the bodies out of the water, cut them in pieces, and publicly expoſed them, until the marquis de Varambon, governor of Guelderland, for the king of Spain, ordered them to be removed, and kept in the tower. Their remains, after the city was taken, were depoſited in a ſepulchre of the ancient dukes of Guelderland, with great pomp, at which prince Maurice, the nobility, magiſtrates, and principal officers of the army attended. The inhabitants were beſieged by prince Maurice of Naſſau, and compelled to ſurrender the 21ſt of October, in the year 1591; the prince, the more readily to maſter the place, and hinder the navigation upon the Wahal, had, the year before conſtructed a fort oppoſite the city, which was called Knotſembourg, ſcarcely was this finiſhed, when the duke of Parma beſieged it, the 13th of July, 1591, but the garriſon made ſo ſtout a reſiſtance, that prince Maurice had time to come to its ſuccour; after this a part of the army of the duke of Parma was defeated by the troops of the ſtates, the 24th of July: this check haſtened the taking of the city. Nimmegen followed the fate of the other cities of Guelderland, being taken by the French in the year 1672, in whoſe hands it remained two years, when they abandoned it. In the year 1702, the duke of Burgundy, and mareſchal Boufflers, commanders of the French army, made an attempt to take it again; but were defeated by a party of Dutch troops, under the command of the earl of Athlone. The churches of Nimmegen are, in general, handſome ſtructures; the town-houſe is remarkable for its beauty and magnificence. The magiſtracy is compoſed of twenty-four, of whom two are burgo-maſters, changed yearly, on the firſt of January, and twelve echevins; the other ten form the common council. In this city was held the celebrated congreſs of plenipotentiaries of almoſt all the powers of Europe, who concluded a treaty of peace, the 30th of July, 1678, between Spain and France, on the 6th of September, between France and the United Provinces; and between the Emperor and France, and between the Emperor and Sweden, in the month of January, 1679: 58 miles SE. Amſterdam. Long. 23. 21. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 50. N.—This town was taken by the French, on the 8th of November, 1794, after having defeated the Britiſh outpoſts a few days before.

NING-PO, a city of China, of the firſt rank, in the province of Tchekiang. This city, which Europeans have called Liam-po, is a very good port, on the eaſtern ſea of China, over againſt Japan: it is a city of the firſt order, and has four towns of the third, under its juriſdiction: it is ſituated on the confluence of two ſmall rivers, which after their union form a channel reaching to the ſea, and is deep enough to bear veſſels of 200 tons. One of theſe rivers which the Chineſe call Kin, comes from the ſouth; the other named Yao, from weſt-north-weſt. Theſe rivers water a plain, ſurrounded almoſt on all ſides, with mountains, and form a ſort of an oval baſon, whoſe diameter from eaſt to weſt (drawing a line acroſs the city) may be about twenty miles; that from north to ſouth, is much greater. The plain which reſembles a garden, for its levelneſs and cultivation, is full of towns and houſes, and divided by a great number of canals, made by the waters which fall from the mountains: 662 miles SSE. NONNETTE, a town of France, in the department of the Puy de Dôme : 1½ league SSE. Iſſoire, and 4 NNW. Brioude.

NONSUCH, one of the ſmaller Bermuda Iſlands.

NONSUCH HARBOUR, an harbour on the eaſt coaſt of the iſland of Antigua. Long. 61. 23. W. Greenwich. Lat. 17. 13. N.

NONTRON, a town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Dordogne : 7 leagues N. Perigueux, and 10 SSW. Limoges. Long. 18. 19. E. Ferro. Lat. 45. 32. N.

NONZA, a town of the iſland of Corſica : 8 miles NW. Baſtia.

NOOPOUR, a town of Hindooſtan, in the country of Guzerat : 55 miles E. Surat, and 142 W. Burhanpour. Long. 73. 50. E. Greenwich. Lat. 21. 11. N.

NOOTKA, or King George's Iſland, an iſland in Nootka Sound. Long. 126. 40. E. Greenwich. Lat. 49. 35. N.

NOOTKA SOUND, a bay of the North Pacific Ocean, on the weſt coaſt of North America, diſcovered by captain Cook, in the year 1778. He ſays, we enter this ſound between two rocky points, that lie eaſt-ſouth-eaſt, and weſt-north-weſt from each other, diſtant between three and four miles. In the middle of the ſound are a number of iſlands, of various ſizes. The depth of water in the middle of the ſound, and even cloſe home to ſome parts of its ſhore, is from forty-ſeven to ninety fathoms, and perhaps more. The harbours and anchoring places within its circuit, are numerous. The land bordering upon the ſea coaſt is of a middling height and level ; but within the ſound, it riſes almoſt every where into ſteep hills, which agree in their general formation, ending in round or blunted tops, with ſome ſharp, though not very prominent, ridges on their ſides. Some of theſe hills may be reckoned high, while others of them are of a very moderate height ; but even the higheſt are entirely covered to their tops with the thickeſt woods ; as well as every flat part towards the ſea. All the coves are furniſhed with a great quantity of fallen wood lying in them, which is carried in by the tide ; and with rills of freſh water, ſufficient for the uſe of a ſhip, which ſeem to be ſupplied entirely from the rains and fogs that hover about the tops of the hills. The water of theſe rills is perfectly clear, and diſſolves ſoap eaſily. The climate, as far as we had any experience of it, is infinitely milder than that on the eaſt coaſt of America, under the ſame parallel of latitude. The trees which chiefly compoſe the woods, are the Canadian pine, white cypreſs, the wild pine, with two or three other ſorts of pine leſs common. The two firſt make up almoſt two-thirds of the whole. The trees, in general, grow with great vigour, and are all of a large ſize. About the rocks, and verge of the woods, we found ſtrawberry-plants, ſome raſberry, currant, and gooſeberry-buſhes, which were all in a moſt flouriſhing ſtate, with a few ſmall black alder-trees. There are, likewiſe, a ſpecies of ſow-thiſtle, gooſe-graſs, ſome crow's-foot, which has a very fine crimſon flower, and two ſorts of anthericum, one with a large orange flower, and the other with a blue one. We alſo found, in theſe ſituations, ſome wild roſe buſhes, which were juſt budding, a great quantity of young leeks, with triangular leaves, a ſmall ſort of graſs, and ſome water-creſſes, which grow about the ſides of the rills, beſides great abundance of Andromeda. Within the woods, beſides two ſorts of underwood ſhrubs unknown to us, are moſſes and ferns. The account that we can give of the quadrupeds, is taken from the ſkins which the natives brought to ſell ; of theſe the moſt common were bears, deer, foxes, and wolves. The bear ſkins were in great numbers ; few of them very large ; but, in general, of a ſhining black colour. The deer ſkins were ſcarcer. The foxes are in great plenty, and of ſeveral varieties ; ſome of their ſkins being quite yellow, with a black tip to the tail ; others of a deer or reddiſh yellow, intermixed with black ; and a third ſort of a whitiſh grey or aſh colour, alſo intermixed with black. Beſides the common ſort of martin, the pine-martin is alſo here. The ermine is alſo found at this place : but is rare and ſmall ; nor is the hair remarkably fine. The racoons and ſquirrels are of the common ſort ; but the latter is rather ſmaller than our's, and has a deeper ruſty colour running along the back. The ſea animals ſeen off the coaſt, were whales, porpoiſes, ſeals, and ſea otters. Birds, in general, are not only rare as to the different ſpecies, but very ſcarce as to numbers. Thoſe which frequent the woods, are crows, and ravens, not at all different from our Engliſh ones, a blueiſh jay or magpie, common wrens, which are the only ſinging birds that we heard, the Canadian or migrating thruſh, and a conſiderable number of brown eagles, with white heads and tails. Fiſh are more plentiful in quantity than birds, though the variety is not very great; and yet, from ſeveral circumſtances, it is probable, that even the variety is conſiderably increaſed at certain ſeaſons. The principal ſorts, which we found in great numbers, are the common herring, but ſcarcely exceeding ſeven inches in length; a ſmaller ſort, which is the ſame with the anchovy, or ſardine, though rather larger; a white, or ſilver-coloured bream, and another of a gold brown colour, with many narrow longitudinal blue ſtripes. The only animals of the reptile kind obſerved here, and found in the woods, were brown ſnakes, two feet long, with whitiſh ſtripes on the back and ſides, which are harmleſs, as we often ſaw the natives carry them alive in their hands, and browniſh water-lizards. The perſons of the natives are, in general, under the common ſtature; but not ſlender in proportion, being commonly pretty full or plump, though not muſcular. The viſage of moſt of them is round and full; and ſometimes, alſo, broad, with high prominent cheeks; and, above theſe, the face is frequently much depreſſed, or ſeems fallen in quite acroſs between the temples; the noſe alſo flattening at its baſe, with pretty wide noſtrils, and a rounded point. The forehead rather low; the eyes ſmall, black, and rather languiſhing than ſparkling; the mouth round, with large round thickiſh lips; the teeth tolerably equal and well ſet, but not remarkably white. They have either no beards at all, which was moſt commonly the caſe, or a ſmall thin one upon the point of the chin; which does not ariſe from any natural defect of hair on that part, but from plucking it out, more or leſs; for ſome of them and particularly the old men, have not only conſiderable beards all over the chin, but whiſkers, or muſtachios; both on the upper lip; and running from thence toward the lower jaw obliquely downward. Their colour we never could poſitively determine, as their bodies were incruſted with paint and dirt; though, in particular caſes, when theſe were well rubbed off, the whiteneſs of the ſkin appeared almoſt to equal that of Europeans; though rather of that pale effete caſt which diſtinguiſhes thoſe of our ſouthern nations. The women are nearly of the ſame ſize, colour, and form, with the men; from whom it is not eaſy to diſtinguiſh them, as they poſſeſs no natural delicacies ſufficient to render their perſons agreeable. Their common dreſs is a flaxen garment, or mantle, ornamented on the upper edge by a narrow ſtrip of fur, and, at the lower edge by fringes or taſſels. Beſides the above dreſs, which is common to both ſexes, the men frequently throw over their other garments the ſkin of a bear, wolf, or ſea-otter, with the hair outward, and tie it, as a cloak, near the upper part, wearing it ſometimes before and ſometimes behind. The ears of many of them are perforated in the lobe, where they make a pretty large hole; and two others higher up on the outer edge. In theſe holes they hang bits of bone, quills fixed upon a leathern thong, ſmall ſhells, bunches of woollen taſſels; or pieces of thin copper, which our beads could never ſupplant. The ſeptum of the noſe, in many, is alſo perforated, through which they draw a piece of ſoft cord, and others wear, at the ſame place, ſmall thin pieces of iron, braſs, or copper, ſhaped almoſt like a horſe-ſhoe, the narrow opening of which receives the ſeptum, ſo as that the two points may gently pinch it, and the ornament thus hangs over the upper lip. The rings of our braſs buttons, which they eagerly purchaſed, were appropriated to this uſe. About their wriſts they wear bracelets, or bunches of white bugle heads, made of a conic ſhelly ſubſtance; bunches of thongs, with taſſels, or a broad black ſhining horny ſubſtance of one piece. And about their ancles they alſo frequently wear many folds of leathern thongs, or the ſinews of animals twiſted to a conſiderable thickneſs. In trafficking with us, ſome of them would betray a knaviſh diſpoſition, and carry off our goods without making any return. But, in general, it was otherwiſe; and we had abundant reaſon to commend the fairneſs of their conduct. However, their eagerneſs to poſſeſs iron and braſs, and, indeed, any kind of metal, was ſo great, that few of them could reſiſt the temptation to ſteal it, whenever an opportunity offered. The towns or villages ſeem to be the only inhabited parts of the Sound. The number of inhabitants in both might be 2000 in the whole. The houſes are diſpoſed in three ranges or rows, riſing gradually behind each other; the largeſt being that in front, and the others leſs, beſides a few ſtraggling or ſingle ones, at each end. Their furniture conſiſts chiefly of a great number of cheſts and boxes of all ſizes, which are generally piled upon each other, cloſe to the ſides or ends of the houſe, and contain their ſpare garments, ſkins, maſts, and other things which they ſet a value upon. Their other domeſtic utenſils are moſtly ſquare and oblong pails or buckets to hold water and other things, round wooden cups and bowls, and ſmall ſhallow wooden troughs, about two feet long, out of which they eat their food, and baſkets of twigs, bags of matting, &c. Their fiſhing implements, and othee things alſo, lie and hang up in different parts of the houſe, but without the leaſt order, ſo that the whole is a complete ſcene of confuſion. The naſtineſs and ſtench of their houſes are, however at leaſt equal to the confuſion. For, as they dry their fiſh within doors, they alſo gut them there, which with their bones and fragments thrown down at meals, and the addition of other ſorts of filth, lie every where in heaps, and are, I believe, never carried away, till it becomes troubleſome, from their ſize, to walk over them. In a word, their houſes are as filthy as hog-ſties; every thing in and about them ſtinking of fiſh, train oil, and ſmoke. The chief employment of the men ſeems to be that of fiſhing, and killing land or ſea animals, for the ſuſtenance of their families, for we ſaw few of them doing any thing in the houſes; whereas the women were occupied in manufacturing their flaxen or woollen garments, and in preparing the ſardines for drying, which they alſo carry up from the beach in twig baſkets, after the men have brought them in their canoes. The women are alſo ſent in the ſmall canoes to gather muſcles and other ſhell-fiſh; and, perhaps on ſome other occaſions. Though their food, ſtrictly ſpeaking, may be ſaid to conſiſt of every thing animal or vegetable that they can procure, the quantity of the latter bears an exceedingly ſmall proportion to that of the former. Their greateſt reliance ſeems to be upon the ſea, as affording fiſh, muſcles, and ſmaller ſhell fiſh, and ſea animals. Of the firſt, the principal are herrings and ſardines, two ſpecies of bream, and ſmall cod. But the herrings and ſardines are not only eaten freſh, in their ſeaſon, but likewiſe ſerve as ſtores, which, after being dried and ſmoked, are preſerved by being ſewed up in mats, ſo as to form large bales, three or four feet ſquare. Of the ſea animals, the moſt common that we ſaw in uſe amongſt them, as food, is the porpoiſe; the far or rind of which, as well as the fleſh, they cut in large pieces, and having dried them, as they do the herrings, eat them without any farther preparation. The oil which they procure from theſe and other ſea animals, is alſo uſed by them in very great quantities; ſupping it alone with a large ſcoop or ſpoon, made of horn, or mixing it with other food, as ſauce. Their weapons are bows and arrows, ſlings, ſpears, ſhort truncheons of bone, ſomewhat like the patoo patoo of New Zealand, and a ſmall pick-axe, not unlike the common American tomahawk. The ſpear has generally a long point, made of bone. Some of the arrows are pointed with iron, but moſt commonly the points were of indented bone. The tomahawk is a ſtone, ſix or eight inches long, pointed at one end, and the other end fixed into a handle of wood. Their canoes are of a ſimple ſtructure; but to appearance, well calculated for every uſeful purpoſe. Even the largeſt, which carry twenty people or more, are formed of one tree. Many of them are forty feet long, ſeven broad, and about three deep. Their implements for fiſhing and hunting, which are both ingeniouſly contrived, and well made, are nets, hooks, and lines, harpoons, gigs, and an inſtrument like an oar. In the year 1786, a ſmall aſſociation of Britiſh merchants reſiding in the Eaſt Indies, was entered into, and a ſmall ſettlement was formed here, for the purpoſe of obtaining furs; but the ſettlement was ſeized by the Spaniards, in the year 1789, and two veſſels ſent to Mexico, where they were ſet at liberty by the viceroy; on the ſuppoſition, as he declared, that nothing but ignorance of the rights of Spain, could have induced other nations to attempt an eſtabliſhment on that coaſt. The entrance, according to obſervation, is ſituated Long. 133. 12. E. Greenwich. Lat. 49. 33.

NOOVILLA, a town of Eaſt Florida: 54 miles ESE. St. Mark.

NOPELN, or Chriſtianopel, a town of Denmark, in the province of Blekingen; it is fortified, and almoſt ſurrounded by the Baltic, in the manner of a peninſula. In 1603, Chriſtian IV. king of Denmark, gave it a charter of privileges, and called it by his name. But it loſt thoſe privileges in the year 1610, when it was taken by Guſtavus Adolphus, who was at that time hereditary prince, or heir apparent to the crown: 25 miles NE. Carlſcron.

NOQUET'S BAY, a bay of Canada, on the north-weſt coaſt of Lake Michigan: 15 leagues long, and 6 wide. Long. 86. 20. W. Greenwich. Lat. 45. 25. N.

NORA, a town of Sweden, in the province of Weſtmanland: 28 miles NNW. Upſal.

NORBARKE, a town of Sweden, in the province of Dalecarlia: 35 miles S. Fahlun.

NORBEKITTEN, a town of Pruſſia, in the province of Natangen, on the left bank of the Pregel. In the year 1757, the Ruſſian army, which was encamped here, was attacked by the Pruſſians; according to the account of the Pruſſians, they loſt 2000 men, and killed 14,000 of the enemy. The Ruſſian acconnt differs very materially, and ſtates their own loſs at 7000, and that of their opponents at not leſs than 10,000: 48 miles E. Konigſberg.

NORBERG, a town of Sweden, in the province of Weſtmanland, near which are the beſt iron mines in the province: 34 miles N. Stroemſholm.

NORDBORG, a town of Denmark, in the iſland of Aſſen. Long. 9. 43. E. Greenwich. Lat. 55. 3. N.

NORCIA, a city of Italy, in the duchy of Spoleto, the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of the Pope. This city is governed by its own magiſtrates: 18 miles SE. Spoleto, and 48 NE. Rome. Long. 30. 48. E. Ferro. Lat. 42. 35. N.

NORDEN, a ſea-port town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and county of Eaſt Frieſland, ſituated about three miles from the German Sea, and is the oldeſt town in Eaſt Frieſland; open, but large, and commercial, containing a good harbour. Its juriſdiction is managed by the prince's adminiſtrator, the burgher-maſter, and council: 15 miles N. Emden. Long. 24. 34. E. Ferro. Lat. 53. 37. N.

NORDERNAY, an iſland in the German Ocean, near the coaſt of Eaſt Frieſland, about 4 miles long, and 2 where broadeſt. Long. 24. 30. E. Ferro. Lat. 53. 45. N.

NORDI OE, a lake of Norway, 32 miles in circumference, 50 miles W. Chriſtiania.

NORDHAUSEN, an imperial town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, ſituated on the Zorge, between the county of Hohenſtein, and the lordſhip of Klettenberg, and divided into Old and New. In it are ſeven Lutheran churches, and a well-built orphan-houſe. This city carries on a good corn trade to the Upper Hartz, and diſtils great quantities for brandy, with manufactures of marble and alabaſter, the materials of which are brought from Stollberg and Hohenſtein. In the year 1180, it was burnt by Henry the Lion, duke of Saxony. It has been a free imperial city ever ſince its firſt foundation: in it reſide an imperial vogt and judge. The former of theſe offices, or that called the penal judicature, was held by the ancient counts of Hohenſtein, at leaſt in the 15th century; but, on their failure, the emperor Rodolphus II. in 1600, conferred it on the electoral houſe of Saxony, which, in 1697, made an abſolute and perpetual ceſſion of it to the electoral houſe of Brandenburg. The juſticiary was anciently a landgrave of Thuringia; from him this dignity paſſed to the dukes and electors of Saxony, who, in 1697, likewiſe ceded it to the elector of Brandenburg; but, in 1717, that houſe, in conſideration of the ſum of 50,000 rix-dollars transferred to the city of Nordhauſen, and its magiſtracy, the two aforementioned offices of vogt and juſticiary, with all rights, prerogatives, and emoluments. The matricular aſſeſſment of Nordhauſen is 80 florins; and to the chamber of Wetzlar, it pays 94 rix-dollars, 62½ kruitzers: 38 miles N. Erfurt. Long. 28. 23. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 26. N.

NORDHEIM, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and principality of Calenberg, on the Ruhme, which, at this place, divides itſelf into two branches. Over each of them, is a bridge of ſtone, and the whole river runs into the Leine. Nordheim is the third in order of the great towns, of the principality of Calenberg. It has only one pariſh church, but contains likewiſe, a grammar-ſchool, and ſome manufactures. It was erected into a town, in 1252, by Albert the Great. The governor of the town holds the court, examines cauſes, and manages trials, but the ſentence is pronounced by the burghermaſter and council, without any concurrence of his. The ancient counts of Nordheim, and lords of Bomeneburg were deſcended from count Hermann, who lived towards the cloſe of the 10th century. Richenza, daughter to count Henry the Thick, in the beginning of the 12th century, married Lothario, of Querfurt, count of Supplingburg, and afterwards duke of Saxony and emperor, by which marriage he acquired the large countries of Nordheim and Brunſwick, or the Duchy on the Weſer, which, by Gertrude, their daughter, came to her huſband, Henry the Magnanimous, and thus to Welpho's family: 10 miles N. Gottingen. Long. 27. 18. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 34. N.

NORDKIOPING, a town of Sweden, in the province of Eaſt Gothland, on the river Motala. It is a ſtaple town, next to Stockholm in extent, and was formerly fortified. In the year 1719, this city was deſtroyed by the Ruſſians. It contains five churches, and about 10,000 inhabitants; carries on a conſiderable trade; and has a new and commodious quay. Here are alſo, two copper-mills, a hammer-mill for braſs, ſeveral paper-mills, 50 corn-mills, woollen manufactures, &c. Here is, likewiſe, a ſalmon-fiſhery: 76 miles SW. Stockholm. Long. 15. 59. E. Greenwich. Lat. 58. 35. N.

NORDKIRCHEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and biſhopric of Munſter: 6 miles N. Werne.

NORDLAND, a province of Sweden, bounded on the north by Lapland, on the eaſt by the Gulf of Bothnia, on the ſouth by Upland, and Dalecarlia, and on the weſt by Norway, Dalecarlia, and Lapland. Nordland, in the times of paganiſm, was a diſtinct monarchy, to which ſeveral vaſſal-kings were tributary. This country has the advantage of all the other parts of the kingdom, in the plenty of timber and veniſon it affords; but its rocks and mountains leave but a ſmall extent of land, fit for tillage. Here are, however, ſome fertile ſpots and verdant paſtures, which are agreeably interſperſed with lakes, rivers, and woods. This province, beſides the timber it yields, has ſeveral rich mines, forges, or hammer-mills, and other works for metal. Its lakes and rivers abound in fiſh; and great numbers of cattle are bred in the country. Here are greater flights of wild geeſe, than in any other part of the kingdom. Birch-trees and oak do not grow wild beyond Upland, ſo that thoſe trees are very ſcarce here. Some ſcattered tracts of land in this country are inhabited by the Finlanders. Nordland has nine towns, and comprehends ſeven provinces.

NORDLEDA, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony and duchy of Saxe Lauenburg: 4 miles SSW. Ottendorff.

NORDLINGEN, a free and imperial town of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, on the Eger, in a fertile country, particularly abounding in paſturage, and, till the year 1238, ſtood on the adjacent hill of Emerantberg, but was that year conſumed by fire, upon which it was built on its preſent ſite. The burghers here, are almoſt all of them Lutherans, and thoſe of that religion, excluſive of the parochial church, are poſſeſſed of two others, one of which ſtands near the hoſpital, and a Latin ſchool; but the Roman Catholics in this city, celebrate public worſhip in the church near the German houſe, which belongs to the land commanders of Ellingen, in Franconia, and which, in the year 1387, fell to the Teutonic order. The magiſtracy, alſo, are Lutheran. Formerly, the town was under the biſhopric of Ratiſbon, but obtained the freedom of the empire, in the year 1251. The emperors, Charles IV. and Wenceſlaus, promiſed, that this town ſhould be maintained in its immediate dependency on the empire. Nordlingen was formerly aſſeſſed to the matricula of the empire and circle, at 260 florins, but, in the year 1683, this aſſeſſment was reduced to 150. Its contingent to the chamber of Wetzlar is ſaid to be 219 rix-dollars, 72 kruitzers. The emperor, Charles IV. granted it the privilege of holding a court, but it has made no uſe of it. Near it, in the year 1634, the Swedes were defeated by the Imperialiſts. In 1647, it was beſieged by the army of the empire, for 17 weeks, during which, it ſuffered greatly by an accidental fire. In the year 1702, a famous compact was entered into here between the five circles, and the town better fortified, as being a bulwark to the circle of Franconia, againſt Bavaria. The princes and counts of the houſe of Oettingen, have, for a long time paſt, endeavoured to acquire the juriſdiction over its territories, which has given riſe to many, and even bloody conteſts: 54 miles E. Stuttgard, and 30 NNW. Augſburg. Long. 28. 8. E. Ferro. Lat. 48. 46. N.—On the 11th of Auguſt, 1796, this town was taken by the French.

NORDMARSCH, a ſmall iſland of Denmark, in the North Sea: 3 miles NW. Nordſtrand.

NORDON, or Nordebourg, a town of Pruſſia, in the province of Natangen: 40 miles SE. Konigſberg.

NORDORF, or Nordtorp, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Holſtein: 15 miles SW. Kiel, and 35 N. Hamburg.

NORDSTRAND, an iſland of Denmark, in the North Sea, ſituated near the coaſt of Sleſwick, about 12 leagues long, and 5 wide. Long. 8. 50. E. Greenwich. Lat. 54. 35. N.

NORE, a river of Ireland, which paſſes by Kilkenny, and runs into the Barrow, 2 miles N. New Roſs.

NORE, a noted place in the river Thames, at the point of a ſand, which runs off from the iſland of Grain, to the eaſtward from it, on which was formerly a buoy, and a light is now fixed on a floating veſſel. Long. 0. 44. E. Greenwich.

NORE (Black), a cape of England, on the coaſt of Somerſetſhire, in the mouth of the Severn: 5 miles SW. from the mouth of the Avon.

NOREGNA, a town of Spain, in the province of Aſturia: 8 miles NNE. Oviedo.

NORFOLK, a county of England, bounded on the north and eaſt by the German Sea; on the ſouth by Suffolk, and on the weſt by Cambridgeſhire; about 59 miles in length from eaſt to weſt, and 38 in its greateſt breadth from north to ſouth, in the centre of the county, but conſiderably leſs at each extremity: according to a ſurvey made a few years ſince, out of 1,094,400 acres, ſuppoſed to be the ſuperficial contents of the county, the ſpace occupied by the towns is eſtimated at 1500, the public and private roads are calculated at 16,416, lakes and rivers 2000, ſedgy and ſwampy ground 1500, unimproved commons 80,000, woods and plantations 10,000, arable land 729,600, meadows, parks, and upland paſture 126,692, marſh lands 63,346, warrens and ſheepwalks 63,346. It is divided into 33 hundred, which contain one city (Norwich), 34 towns, and about 220,000 inhabitants. No county is more conveniently ſituated, or has a greater ſhare of river and ſea navigation, ſo eſſential to trade, and advantageous to agriculture: for, beſides the ſea, which waſhes the coaſt about 80 miles, there are ſeveral navigable rivers, as the Nene, Yare, Waveny, Ouſe, &c. The greater part of the arable land is ſandy. The prime parts of the country lie north and north-eaſt of Norwich, great part of which may be denominated a true ſandy loam, equal in value to the beſt parts of the Netherlands, to which it is ſimilar. It is highly fruitful, and ſo temperate and pleaſant to work, that it is rarely injured by wet or drought, ſo that the occupier is ſeldom put out of his rotation of cropping. The diſtricts ſouth and ſouth-eaſt of Norwich, though chiefly ſand, have an occaſional mixture of clay, and are, in many parts, wet and full of ſprings; but yet theſe parts are fruitful, though to a leſs degree than the former; they are likewiſe leſs pleaſant, and more expenſive to work. The largeſt proportion of the county lies weſt and north-weſt of Norwich; there is ſome very good land in different parts of this diſtrict; but, upon the whole, it is a very inferior country to the two preceding diſtricts. It runs, in general, light, and its beſt dependence is upon the fold. It is here, that great farms are to be found, with a thin population; and, if it were not for the occaſional aſſiſtance derived from the eaſtern part of the county, there would often be a want of hands in the harveſt, and other buſy ſeaſons. The diſtricts which lie ſouth-weſt of Norwich, run upon a ſtill lighter ſand; ſo light, that ſometimes the ſand in a high wind drifts from one pariſh to another. This is the part where the great rabbit warrens are found, which, upon this ſoil, pay better than any other thing the land could be appropriated to. Marſh land may be conſidered as a diſtrict by itſelf. The ſoil is a rich ooze, evidently a depoſit from the ſea: the north part is highly productive; but the ſouth part very much injured for want of better drainage. Ploughing is certainly done with much greater eaſe in this county than any other, and much cheaper. There is no inſtance of more than two horſes being put to a plough: the ſame perſon who holds the plough, drives the horſe alſo with reins, a cuſtom moſt probably introduced from the Netherlands. There are ſome parts of Norfolk which will produce ſix quarters of wheat, and ten of oats, upon an acre; but in very light parts of the county, the farmer is glad to get two quarters of wheat, and three of barley. However, the general average crops of the whole county, one year with another, may be eſtimated as high as three quarters of wheat, and four of barley, and other articles in proportion. The face of the country is univerſally flat; not a hill is to be ſeen in its whole extent; but, in moſt parts, the ſurface is broken by ſmall riſings and declivities. The wood land of an old ſtanding, is not conſiderable; a ſingle wood, or coppice, is found here and there, but no great tract together; nor are they remarkable for any particular application of the underwood. Of late years, however, large plantations of timber have been made of oaks, Spaniſh cheſnut, and other foreſt-trees, by ſome of the principal landholders of the county. In a good corn year, when there is a free exportation, it has been ſaid that the four Norfolk parts export as much corn as all the reſt of England, which may probably be true, for it is ſeldom leſs than a million ſterling in value, and often more. In the year 1792, there were actually 20,594 fat bullocks brought from Norfolk to Smithfield and Iſlington, and about 3000 to St. Ive's, and other places; but this is conſidered rather as a larger ſupply than uſual; but they may be ſafely taken at 20,000, as a yearly average, about one quarter of which are home-bred beaſts, and the remainder Scotch and Iriſh. The ſheep are ſuppoſed to be upwards of 30,000; at leaſt, they may be ſafely taken at that number. The towns are Lynn, Yarmouth, Thetford, Caſtle Riſing, Aleſham, Attleborough, Buckenham, Burnham, Caſton, Clay, Coomer, Dereham, Diſs, Downham, Fakenham, Foulſham, Harleſton, Harling, Hingham, Holt, Loddon, Methwold, Reepham, Secking, Snetſham, Swaffham, North Walſham, South Walſham, Walſingham, Watton, Wells, Windham, and Worſted. The four firſt, with the city of Norwich and the county, each return two members to the Britiſh parliament. Norwich is the capital.

NORFOLK, a county of United America, in the ſtate of Virginia.

NORFOLK, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Virginia, on the Elizabeth river, oppoſite Suffolk: 64 miles SE. Richmond.

NORFOLK ISLAND, an iſland in the South Pacific Ocean, about 5 leagues in circumference, diſcovered by Captain Cook in the year 1774, who ſays, "We found it uninhabited, and were undoubtedly the firſt that ever ſet foot on it. We obſerved many trees and plants common at New Zealand; and, in particular, the flax plant, which is rather more luxuriant here, than in any part of that country; but the chief produce is a ſort of ſpruce pine, which grows in great abundance, and to a large ſize, many of the trees being as thick, breaſt high, as two men could fathom, and exceedingly ſtraight and tall. For about 200 yards from the ſhore, the ground is covered ſo thick with ſhrubs and plants, as hardly to be penetrated farther inland. The woods were perfectly clear and free from underwood, and the ſoil ſeemed rich and deep. We found the ſame kind of pigeons, parrots, and parroquets, as in New Zealand, rails, and ſome ſmall birds. The ſea fowl, are, white boobies, gulls, tern, &c. which breed undiſturbed on the ſhores, and in the cliffs of the rocks. On the iſle is freſh water, and cabbage-palm, wood-ſorrel, ſow-thiſtle, and ſamphire, abounding in ſome places on the ſhores, we brought on board as much of each ſort, as the time we had to gather them would admit. Theſe cabbage-trees, or palms, were not thicker than a man's leg, and from ten to twenty feet high. They are of the ſame genus with the cocoa-nut tree; like it, they have large pinnated leaves, and are the ſame as the ſecond ſort found in the Northern parts of New South Wales. The cabbage is, properly ſpeaking, the bud of the tree; each tree producing but one cabbage, which is at the crown, where the leaves ſpring out, and is incloſed in the ſtem. The cutting off the cabbage effectually deſtroys the tree; ſo that no more than one can be had from the ſame ſtem. The cocoa-nut tree, and ſome others of the palm kind, produce cabbage as well as theſe. This vegetable is not only wholeſome, but exceedingly palatable, and proved the moſt agreeable repaſt we had for ſome time. The coaſt does not want fiſh. While we were on ſhore, the people in the boats caught ſome which were excellent. I judged that it was high water at the full and change, about one o'clock; and that the tide riſes and falls, upon a perpendicular, about four or five feet." Long. 168. 16. E. NORHAM, a village of England, in the county of Durham, inſulated in the county of Northumberland, giving name to a tract of country, called Norhamſhire: it is a place of antiquity, and ſaid to have been anciently called Ubbanford, and built in the year 830, by Egfrid, biſhop of Lindisfarn, the remains of king Ceolwulf were removed from Lindisfarn, and interred here. The church had formerly the privilege of a ſanctuary: the caſtle of Norham was built in the year 1121, by Ralph Flambert, biſhop of Durham, on the edge of a rock, above the Tweed: in 1138, it was taken by the Scots, and deſtroyed; in 1174, it was reſtored by Hugh Pudſey, biſhop of Durham, and ſurrendered by him to the crown. In 1215, it was beſieged, but not taken, by Alexander, king of Scotland. In the year 1290, a convention was held here, previous to king Edward's arbitration between Bruce and Baliol, competitors for the crown of Scotland. In 1318, it was again beſieged, without ſucceſs, by the Scots, who took it in 1322, but held it only ten days, being then retaken by king Edward. In 1326, an unſucceſsful attempt was made; but, in 1327, the Scots took it by ſtorm, and deſtroyed a great part of the caſtle and town. It was afterwards repaired by Fox, biſhop of Durham; and before the battle of Flodden Field, the Scots again attempted to take it, and deſtroyed part of the outworks: 6 miles SW. Berwick, and 330 N. London.

NORHOLM, a town of Norway, in the dioceſe of Chriſtianſand: 16 miles NNE. Chriſtianſand.

NORMANDY, before the revolution, a conſiderable province of France, ſo called, bounded on the north by the Engliſh Channel, on the eaſt by Picardy and the Iſle of France, on the ſouth by Beauce, Perche, and Maine, and on the weſt by Bretagne, about 50 leagues from eaſt to weſt, and 25 from north to ſouth. It was divided into Upper and Lower, and contained many conſiderable cities and towns. The two principal were Rouen and Caen. It is now divided into the departments of the Channel, the Calvados, the Lower Seine, the Eure, the Orne, with a ſmall part of the Eure and Loire. It was one of the moſt fruitful provinces in the whole kingdom, as alſo one of the moſt profitable to the king. It abounds in grain, flax, hemp, and vegetables for dying, &c. It yields great quantities of apples and pears, of which the natives make cyder and perry for their uſual drink. It is alſo a fine country for cattle, being full of excellent paſtures. The ſea ſupplies it with plenty of fiſh, and of its water are made great quantities of ſalt. The many iron works in it are alſo of no ſmall advantage to the county. It has likewiſe ſome mines of copper, and ſome medicinal ſprings. This country, under the Roman emperors, was the ſecond Provincia Lugdunenſis, and under the kings of the Franks, conſtituted a part of the kingdom of Neuſtria. Under Charles the Bold, it was over-run by ſwarms of piratical Normans, who ſeated themſelves in Neuſtria, and, in the year 912, obliged Charles the Simple to cede it to them as a fief of France. Their duke and leader, Rollo, having been baptized, the laſt-mentioned Charles gave him his daughter, Giſle, in marriage. The ſucceeding dukes roſe to great power, both here and beyond ſea; and William, in the year 1066, became king of England. In the year 1135. the male line of this king and duke became extinct, in the perſon of Henry I. and his daughter Matilda, married Godfrey, count of Anjou. The firſt fruit of this marriage was, Henry II. king of England, duke of Normandy, lord of Guienne, Poitou, and Saintonge. He left three ſons, Richard, Godfrey, and John, the laſt of whom ſeized on the dominions of both his brothers, and even had Arthur, the ſon of Godfrey, taken off; for which, in the year 1202, Philip Auguſtus, with the conſent of the Peers, deprived him of moſt of his territories in France; and, in the year 1203, Normandy was annexed to the crown. Henry III. of England, ceded to Louis the Pious, and his ſucceſſors, all his claim to this province, which afterwards, to the end of the fourteenth century, ſome kings beſtowed on their eldeſt ſons, with the title of duke of Normandy, till that of Dauphin was inſtituted. The animoſities betwixt the houſes of Orleans and Burgundy gave the Engliſh an opportunity of over-running not only Normandy, but a great part of France. This province they held about thirty years, when they were driven out by Charles VII.

NORTHALBEN, or Nordheim, a town of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, and biſhopric of Bamberg : 10 miles NE. Cronach.

NORTHALLERTON, a town of England, in the north riding of the county of York, with a weekly market on Wedneſday. It is a borough town, though not incorporated, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. About two miles from this town, a battle was fought here, between the Scotch, commanded by the king in perſon, attended by his ſon, and the Engliſh, under the earl of Albemarle, in which the former were defeated. It was called the battle of the Standard, from the circumſtance of a croſs on the top of a large pole being erected on a wheel carriage, in the midſt of the Engliſh army : 34 miles S. Durham, and 223 N. London.

NORTHAMPTON, a town of England, and capital of a county to which it gives name, ſituated on an eminence, by the ſide of the river Nen or Nine, which bounds it on the ſouth-weſt, and over which are two bridges. It is an ancient town, and was formerly ſurrounded with walls, and defended by a caſtle, built by Simon St. Liz, the firſt earl. At one time it contained ſeven churches within the walls, and two without : at preſent it contains only four. Beſides the parochial churches, it had before the reformation, ſeveral religious houſes. In the year 1010, it was pillaged and burnt by the Danes, under their leader Swain. It was garriſoned by king John, in the baron's wars, and held out againſt the attacks of the oppoſite party : in the reign of Henry III. it was poſſeſſed by the barons, but was compelled to yield, and was taken by the king by ſtorm. In the year 1263, ſome ſcholars from Cambridge, on a difference with the townſmen, retired hither, and obtained licenſe of the king to ſettle an univerſity here, which was ſoon diſannulled, on account of its vicinity to Oxford. A like ſeceſſion had happened juſt before from that univerſity hither, on a riot againſt the pope's legate, who had laid them under interdict, and by other diſturbances; which being aſcribed to the great number of ſtudents, the king granted leave to found ſchools here, and ſo many ſcholars ſoon reſorted from Oxford, that after the taking of the town, by the king's forces, it was found neceſſary to oblige them to go back, and forbid them ever to return again. In the year 1460, a battle was fought near the town between the Yorkiſts and Lancaſtrians, in which the latter were completely routed, and king Henry, who was there in perſon, taken priſoner by the earl of Warwick, and carried to London, in triumph. In the year 1642, it was fortified for the parliament, by lord Brook, and a foſſe and baſtion are ſtill to be ſeen, at the north end. In the year 1675, almoſt the whole town was burned down, with Allhallows church, but with 25,000l. raiſed by brief it was ſoon rebuilt, in a handſomer manner than before. The ſtreets are, in general, ſtraight and handſomely built, of a reddiſh kind of ſtone, and the market place is eſteemed the moſt ſpacious, elegant, and complete in the kingdom. Of the caſtle, but little remains but a wide wall. The number of houſes is 1083, and the inhabitants are eſtimated at 5000. The horſe market is reckoned to exceed all others in the kingdom, it being deemed the centre of all its horſe-markets and horſe-fairs, both for ſaddle and harneſs, and the chief rendezvous of the dealers both from York and London. Its principal manufacture is ſhoes, of which great numbets are ſent beyond ſea; and next to that ſtockings and lace. It is the richer and more populous by being a thoroughfare, both in the north and north-weſt roads. Here is a handſome ſeſſions-houſe, and a public infirmary. Several parliaments have at different times, been held here, probably on account of its centrical ſituation. It is governed by a mayor, aldermen, burgeſſes, recorder, &c.; and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. It has three markets weekly, on Wedneſday, Friday, and Saturday : 43 miles NE. Oxford, 32 miles S. Leiceſter, and 66 NNW. London.

NORTHAMPTON, a county of United America, in the ſtate of Pennſylvania.

NORTHAMPTON, a county of United America, in the ſtate of Virginia.

NORTHAMPTON, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Maſſachuſetts, on the Connecticut : 12 miles N. Springfield, and 72 W. Boſton.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the north by Lincolnſhire; on the eaſt by Cambridgeſhire, Huntingdonſhire, and Bedfordſhire; on the ſouth by Buckinghamſhire and Oxfordſhire, on the weſt by Oxfordſhire and Warwickſhire, and on the north-weſt by Leiceſterſhire and Rutland : about 60 miles in length, from north-eaſt to ſouth-weſt, and from 14 to 24 in breadth. It is divided into 20 hundreds, which contain one city, Peterborough, 13 towns, 336 pariſhes, 550,000 acres, and 24,808 houſes. Towards the north-eaſt, the land is interſected and ſurrounded by rivers, and ſubject to inundations, forming the beginning of the fenny tract, which extends through the Iſle of Ely, to the Lincolnſhire waſhes. Elſewhere, Northamptonſhire is conſidered proverbially as a fine and pleaſant county, which opinion is confirmed by the number of noblemen's and gentlemen's ſeats contained in it. Its greateſt defect is the ſcarcity of wood; yet it ſtill poſſeſſes ſome not inconſiderable remains of its old foreſts, particularly thoſe of Rockingham, in the north-weſt, and of Salcey and Whittlebury, in the ſouth. In this laſt, that fierceſt of Britiſh animals of prey, the wild cat, is ſtill found. Many ſmaller woods are interſperſed throughout the county. The higheſt ground in Northamptonſhire, is in the neighbourhood of Daventry, where the Nen and Cherwell, which flow into the eaſtern ſea, and the Leam, which flows into the weſtern, riſe within a ſmall compaſs. A little farther northwards, the Avon and Welland, running into oppoſite ſeas, ſpring near each other. About Toweeſter, in the ſouth, the country is alſo hilly, and the ſoil intermixed with clay, and a ſort of coarſe grit. The products of Northamptonſhire are, in general, the ſame with thoſe of other farming countries. It is, indeed, peculiarly celebrated for grazing land; that tract eſpecially, lying from Northampton, ton, northwards, to the Leiceſterſhire border. Horned cattle, and other animals, are here fed to extraordinary ſizes, and many horſes of the large black breed are reared. Woad for the dyers is cultivated in this part. Much of the arable, in this county, is ſtill open field land; and many ſheep are fed on the high grounds. It was larger at the conqueſt than at preſent; for the north part of Rutland is reckoned into it in Doomſday. The inhabitants are maintained and employed by agriculture: the clothing manufacture was once attempted, without ſucceſs; but there is, at preſent, a conſiderable return from Northampton, and other towns, by ſtockings, and in Kettering and others, ſerges and ſhalloons employ many hands. The towns are, Northampton, Brackley, Higham Ferrers, Cliffe, Daventry, Kettering, Oundle, Rockingham, Rothwell, Thrapſton, Towceſter, Weedon, and Wellingborough. The two firſt, with Peterborough and the county, ſend each two members to the Britiſh parliament, and Higham Ferrers one, nine members being returned in the whole. Northampton is the county town.

NORTHFIELD, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Maſſachuſetts: 13 miles N. Springfield.

NORTHLEACH, a town of England, in the county of Glouceſter, with a weekly market on Wedneſday: 20 miles E. Glouceſter, and 80 W. London.

NORTHLINED, a large lake of North America. Long. 98. 30. W. Greenwich. Lat. 61. 40. N.

NORTHORN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and county of Bentheim, on the Vechte: 8 miles N. Bentheim.

NORTHORP, a town of North Wales, in the county of Flint, near which are large potteries of coarſe earthenware, fire-bricks, &c. In the year 1157, the troops of Henry II. were defeated here by the Welch, under the command of the ſons of Owen Gwynedd; the attack was ſudden, and the ſlaughter dreadful: 11½ miles WNW. Cheſter, and 193 NW. London.

NORTHUMBERLAND, a county of United America, in the ſtate of Pennſylvania.

NORTHUMBERLAND, a county of United America, in the ſtate of Virginia.

NORTHUMBERLAND, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Pennſylvania, on the north ſide of the Suſquahana river, oppoſite Sunbury.

NORTHUMBERLAND, a county of England, bounded on the north-weſt and north by Scotland, on the eaſt by the German Sea, on the ſouth by Durham, and on the weſt by Cumberland; of a triangular form; its greateſt length 64 miles, and greateſt breadth 48, and about 232 miles in circumference. It is divided into ſix wards, which contain thirteen towns, 460 pariſhes, and about 100,000 inhabitants. Under the heptarchy, it was part of the kingdom of Northumbria, which comprehended all the country between the two ſeas, north of the Humber, to the Edinburgh frith. It was governed by earls, till ſoon after the conqueſt, when it had a diſtinct ſheriff, and was divided into baronies, and thoſe again into ſix wards. The ſoil is various. On the rivers and ſea-coaſt remarkably fertile; to the north-weſt and ſouth-weſt, very mountainous; to the weſt full of heaths, fens, and lakes, ſome of the former abounding with mines of ore and coal, and others cultivated, and the mountains feed large quantities of ſheep. The climate, in regard to temperature, is ſubject to great variation; upon the mountains, ſnow will often continue for ſeveral months (and may frequently be ſeen there of a conſiderable depth) when there is none in the lower diſtricts. The weather is very inconſtant, but moſtly runs in extremes. In the ſpring months, the cold, piercing, eaſterly winds, are moſt prevalent: and the longeſt droughts are always accompanied by them. In ſome places they have acquired the name of ſea-pines, from the ſlow progreſs vegetation makes, whenever they continue for a few weeks. Rain is of little uſe while they prevail, from the great cold which always attends them. The mild weſtern and ſouthern breezes rarely take place before June: they are certain harbingers of rain and vigorous vegetation; and are the moſt prevailing winds through the ſummer and autumn. In the latter ſeaſon, they often blow with tempeſtuous fury; daſh out the corn, and diſappoint the hopes of the farmer. A late ſurvey ſuppoſes that 817,200 acres of land are proper for the plough, and 450,000 are mountainous and improper for tillage, making, in the whole, 1,267,200. There are but few conſiderable woods. The principal rivers are the Tyne, the Tweed, the Coquet, and the Alne, which abound with fiſh, eſpecially ſalmon and trout, the coaſts are rich in cod, ling, turbot, ſoles, plaice, whitings, &c.; but the greateſt produce of Northumberland is coal, of which upwards of 650,000 chaldrons are ſuppoſed to be ſent annually to London. The towns are Berwick, Newcaſtle, Morpeth, Alnwick, Belford, Billingham, Blythe, Haltweſel, Hexham, Rothbury, Shields, Tinmouth, Wooler. The three firſt and the county, ſend each two members to the Britiſh parliament.

NORTHWICH, a town of England, in the county of Cheſter, at the union of the Weaver and the Dan. Here is a large cotton manufacture, and conſiderable ſalt-works. Large mines of rock-ſalt were diſcovered here, in the beginning of the preſent century, on the ſouth ſide of Northwich, which they dig and ſend to the ſea-ſhore, where it is prepared for uſe. The ſalt-quarries here, with the pillars and cryſtal roof, extending ſeveral acres, afford a pleaſing and pictureſque appearance. The ſtratum of ſalt lies about forty yards deep; above it is a bed of whitiſh clay. The church here has a ſemicircular choir, and the roof of the nave is adorned with many wicker baſkets, ſuch as the ſalt ſettles in. Here is a weekly market on Friday: 18 miles E. Cheſter, and 173 NW. London.

NORVI, a town of the iſland of Sardinia: 16 miles NE. Saſſari.

NORUM, a town of Sweden, in the province of Weſt Gothland: 20 miles S. Uddevalla.

NORWALK, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Connecticut: 12 miles SW. Fairfield.

NORWICH, a city of England, capital of the county of Norfolk, and the ſee of a biſhop, on the Yare. This city is one of the moſt populous in England, and long took the lead in point of conſequence among the inland towns. For this it was indebted to its great manufacture of crapes, bombazins, and ſtuffs of various kinds, which is ſtill conſiderable, though ſomewhat declined, on account of the rivalſhip of the cotton branches, and in conſequence of prohibition in foreign countries. The manufacture is confined to the city; but the operations of ſpinning and preparing the wool, employ the poor of moſt of the ſmall towns and villages in the county. The wool uſed is brought from the counties of Lincoln, Leiceſter, and Northampton. The goods are ſent to various parts of the world, particularly Holland, Germany, and the Mediterranean. Many of them are ſhipped at Yarmouth, and many are ſent to London, and other places, by land. Norwich contains many opulent inhabitants, and good buildings, but its ſtreets are narrow, and ill-diſpoſed. The firſt mention of Norwich in hiſtory, is in the Saxon Chronicle, in the year 1004, when Swain and his Danes deſtroyed it, and left it in ruins for ſeven years, when they returned and took poſſeſſion of the country, and probably refortified the caſtle, the works of which are circular, in their manner. Under them it flouriſhed ſo much as to make a conſiderable figure in the Confeſſor's time, being a hundred within itſelf, and ſecond to no city but York. It had then 25 churches, in the Conqueror's time 43, afterwards 50, and now 36, in uſe. The caſtle, now the gaol, is of great antiquity, for here was a caſtle, in the Saxon times, held by Waner, earl of Norwich, againſt the Conqueror; but he was at laſt obliged to quit the realm, and went to Jeruſalem with his wife. This caſtle is part of the county of Norfolk, and not of the city, and had all along governors thereof. It has been anciently, and ſtill is the gaol for the county, and the aſſizes, &c. are held there. Mr. Bloomfield is of opinion that the manufacture of worſted ſtuffs was introduced by the Flemings, ſo early as Henry I. firſt at Worſted, in this county, whence its name. The citizens of Norwich, however, obtained of Richard II. that the worſted made there might be tranſported; and by act of parliament, 11 Henry IV. it was enacted, that the mayor of Norwich ſhould have the meaſuring and ſealing of the worſteds. This falling to decay, the city invited, in 1563, a number of manufacturers from the Low Countries, who came over to the number of 300, and ſoon after amounted to as many as 1000. They ſet up the making of bayes, ſayes, arras, and mochades, caungeantries, tufted mochades, currelles, and all other works mingled with ſilk, ſaittie, and linen-yarn; and they firſt made bombazeens in 1575. Theſe have been ſo much improved of late years, in making damaſks, camlets, black and white crapes, &c. that it is computed that ſtuffs to the amount of 700,000l. have ſometimes been manufactured here in a year. The art of printing was introduced here at this time by Anthony Solmpne, one of theſe ſtrangers. The cathedral, built by Herbert de Loſinga, 1096 (whoſe ſtatue is over the north tranſept door, and his tomb below the high altar, modernized in repairing) was damaged by fire, 1171, and repaired and completed 1180, by biſhop John of Oxford. NOTTINGHAM, a town of England, and capital of the county to which it gives name, ſituated on an eminence, by the ſide of the river Trent. It is large, populous, and handſome, containing three pariſhes, and conſidered as one of the principal ſeats of the ſtocking manufacture. The goods made here are chiefly of the finer kinds, as thoſe of ſilk and cotton; and the trade is extended to the neighbourhood round, and ſome of the more diſtant towns. As the articles of the Nottinghamſhire manufactures are valuable in proportion to their bulk, they are chiefly conveyed to the different ports and places of conſumption by land. A conſiderable ſhare of them is exported to various parts of Europe, America, and the Weſt Indies. The cotton for this manufacture is ſpun by machinery, worked by water. Nottingham has alſo a manufacture of coarſe earthenware. The malting buſineſs is likewiſe conſiderable. In the reign of King John, a charter was granted, wherein all perſons within ten miles round Nottingham are forbidden to work dyed cloth, but in the borough. This manufacture continued in a proſperous ſtate, till the reign of Queen Mary, then it gradually went off, till at laſt it entirely left this place. The tanners were once very numerous here, and their habitations as well as their pits, were formerly diſperſed all over the town. The maſters of this trade, were, in 1641, thirty-ſix in number, in the year 1654, they were forty-ſeven, and in 1707, there were twenty-one; ſince which time, they are dwindled entirely away. The caſtle was built by William the Conqueror, to keep the Engliſh in awe, and was ſo ſtrong by nature and art, as to bid defiance to any force which at that time could be brought againſt it. Afterwards, Edward IV. was at great expence to repair and embelliſh it with handſome buildings, to which Richard III. made additions. Nor did it in the ſeveral revolutions of time, undergo the common fate of great caſtles; having never been taken by ſtorm. It was once in vain beſieged by Henry of Anjou, at which time the garriſon burnt down the adjoining houſes. It was once alſo ſurpriſed in the barons' war, by Robert earl Ferrars, who ſtripped the citizens of their goods. David king of Scots was kept a priſoner in this caſtle; the celebrated Roger Mortimer, earl of March, who reſided here, was ſeized by Edward III. and his friends; and afterwards tried and executed. Charles I. ſet up his ſtandard Auguſt 22, 1642, in a cloſe, ſince called Nevil's cloſe, without the caſtle, to the north. Shortly after, it became a garriſon for thr parliament, who, at the end of the war, gave orders to pull down the caſtle. At the reſtoration, George Villiers, duke of Buckingham, whoſe mother was only daughter and heir to Francis earl of Rutland, ſold it to William Cavendiſh, marquis, and afterwards duke of Newcaſtle, who, in his eighty-ſecond year, 1674, began, and his ſon and ſucceſſor finiſhed, a noble houſe, at the expence of 14,000l. which is the ſeat of his ſucceſſors, dukes of Newcaſtle. Nottingham is governed by a mayor, aldermen, recorder, council, &c. and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. Here are three markets weekly, on Wedneſday, Friday, and Saturday: 14 miles NE. Derby, and 123 NNW. London.

NOTTINGHAM, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Maryland: 5 miles NE. Baltimore.

NOTTINGHAM ISLAND, an iſland in Hudſon's Bay. Long. 78. 30. W. Greenwich. Lat. 63. 30. N.

NOTTINGHAMSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the north by Yorkſhire, on the eaſt by Lincolnſhire, on the ſouth by Leiceſterſhire, and on the weſt by Derbyſhire: about 50 miles in length, and 25 in breadth. It is divided into eight hundreds, which contain 13 towns, 168 pariſhes, and about 150,300 inhabitants. Being happily ſituated between the mountainous country of Derbyſhire, on the one hand, and the flat of Lincolnſhire on the other, it enjoys ſuch a temperature of ſoil and climate, as to render it one of the moſt fertile and agreeable counties in England. The glory of this country is its noble river, the Trent; which after croſſing the counties of Stafford and Derby, enters Nottinghamſhire, at its ſouth-weſtern extremity; and thence, croſſing obliquely to the eaſt, coaſts along its whole eaſtern ſide, becoming, towards the northern part, the boundary betwixt this county and that of Lincoln. During this whole courſe, the Trent is a large navigable river, imparting fertility to the wide tract of meadows through which it flows, and affording a ready conveyance for the corn and other products of the country. Its chief inconvenience is that of being ſubject to frequent and great floods. The vale of Belvoir or Bever, one of the richeſt and moſt beautiful tracts of cultivation in the kingdom, lies chiefly in the ſouth-eaſtern part of Nottinghamſhire, ſtretching towards the Trent. Almoſt the whole of the middle and weſtern part of the county was formerly occupied by the famous foreſt of Sherwood, or Shirewood, popularly known throughout the kingdom as the ſcene of many fabulous adventures of that noted outlaw Robin Hood, and his companions. By incloſure and cultivation, the bounds of this woody tract are now much contracted; and great part of what was formerly thronged with trees, is now a naked heath; a fate common to many of the Engliſh foreſts. New plantations, however, of great extent, have of late years been formed on the hills of the foreſt land, which may afford materials for future navies, when the improvident waſte of timber in other parts, may have rendered ſuch a ſupply peculiarly fortunate. From the middle and north-weſtern parts of this county, ſeveral ſtreams unite to form the Idle, a river which joins the Trent, at the north-eaſtern angle of Nottinghamſhire. To the eaſtward of this river, the ſoil, quite to the Trent, is a ſtrong clay, which is expreſſed in the names of two diſtricts in this quarter, the North and South Clay Diviſions. Nottinghamſhire has of old been famous for its bread and beer; and to this day, its chief products and exports are corn and malt. It is alſo of no ſmall conſequence as a manufacturing county; and its fabrics are at preſent in a thriving and increaſing ſtate. Near Mansfield is found a good freeſtone, proper for building or paving, ſtaddles, &c. Lime-ſtone is found near Newark, and ſeveral other places; and gypſum or plaſter is dug likewiſe near Newark, and at Red Hill, a few miles to the ſouth-weſt of Nottingham, and great quantities ſent to London. Other commodities are wool, liquorice, woad, fiſh, and fowl. The towns in the county are Nottingham, Newark, Eaſt Retford, Bingham, Blythe, Mansfield, Southwell, Tuxford, Workſop. The three firſt, and the county, each ſend two members to the Britiſh parliament.
